As for the years ahead, Dockendorff noted, "Thanks to the kids coming up, I see the varsity making the playoffs within a couple of years. They have some top players coming back next season and we certainly have several players on the JV team that will lend a hand.

"With the middle school program going, the varsity should have a nice feeder system, and it should make them a power in the future and certainly a playoff contender."

Obviously the middle school programs is an added expense on the athletic budget, but fortunately, Cohasset is one of the towns that can afford the thriving program.

Junior lacrosse program needs additional coaches

Thanks to phenomenal growth in popularity and interest, the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse Club is in need of additional coaches for the Spring 1998 season. No lacrosse experience is necessary.

The reason the team can take coaches without experience is the structure of its league, the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Association, the largest youth league in the country. The league allows communities to have more than one entry, and then allows multiple teams to be scheduled so that they always play in the same place — either home or away together — on the same day.

"We have grown to the point where there is a good chance we will want to field two teams this year," said Chuck Jaffe, who runs the junior program in Cohasset. "If we get volunteers with no experience, I can act as head coach for both teams. If we get someone with lacrosse experience, we each can coach one team. We need a helping hand more than we need an experienced hand."

Jaffe explains that the biggest need is for a coach to assist during practices, when the only way to install an offense or defense is in small groups of players. "The rest of the kids should be doing drills or installing the same offense at the other end of the field, but that's not possible without a second or possibly a third coach," he says.

Last year, the Cohasset junior lacrosse team had 30 players, a high number within the Mass Bay youth teams. This year, thanks to a successful summer camp and increased awareness and interest, Jaffe expects closer to 40 children in grades 5 and 6 to sign up. Without at least one additional coach, Jaffe says he might have no choice but to limit the program to a single team of 30 players signed up on a first-come, first-served basis.

With sign-up set for December and the league needing notification of Cohasset's intention to field a second team by January, the program needs to hear from volunteers now. The Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League also holds a winter coaches clinic that volunteers may want to attend.

For this spring, Jaffe plans to practice the junior lacrosse program at or after 4:30 p.m. on Mondays and Fridays. Games are Sunday afternoons. Practice begins as weather permits in march, and the season ends Father's Day weekend in June.

For more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program and becoming a volunteer coach, contact Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0332.

Advanced placement awards for CHS

Ten students at Cohasset High School have been named AP Scholars by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement (AP) Examinations. Approximately 10 percent of America's graduating seniors have taken one or more AP Examinations. Only about 13 percent of the more than 581,000 students who took AP Exams in May 1997 performed at a sufficiently high level to merit such recognition.

The College Board recognizes several levels of achievement based on the number of year-long courses and exams (or their equivalent semester-long courses and exams). At Cohasset High School two students qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by receiving grades of three or higher on five or more AP Examinations, with an average exam grade of at least 3.5. These students are Ely Kahn and Ryan McWilliams.

Two students qualified for the AP Scholar with Honor Award by receiving grades of three or higher on four or more AP Examinations, with an average exam grade of at least 3.25. These students are Leah Kisiel and Christopher Lesniewski-Laas.

Six students qualified for the AP Scholar Award by receiving grades of three or higher on three or more AP Examinations. The AP Scholars are Rachel Begley, Justin Buckley, Burke Davis, Kevin Duffy, Kathleen Fitzsimmons and Jacqueline Hurley.

DRUG FACTS

Alcohol is the ordinary name for a substance called ethyl alcohol, grain alcohol, or pure spirits (chemical name, ethanol). Ethanol dissolves many organic substances, among them shellac, and natural and synthetic resins and oils. It is used extensively in lacquers. It is also an ingredient of tinctures and many toilet and drug preparations. Ethanol is used on the body as rubbing alcohol, and for sterilizing surgical instruments. The legal term for ethanol is "proof spirit." It is 50 percent by volume of ethanol and 50 percent by volume of water. Thus pure ethanol is rated as 200-proof, and one actual gallon is equivalent to two proof gallons. An alcoholic beverage is a drink that contains ethyl alcohol. Fermented drinks contain four to 20 percent ethyl alcohol. Distilled drinks contain 40 to 55 percent ethyl alcohol.

Investing: Remaining diversified

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

YOUR MONEY'S WORTH

Most investors know that having different types of companies and asset classes represented in their portfolio enhances the safety and performance of their investment. Assessing the balance is an essential step in aligning the portfolio's objectives with larger investment goals.

But ensuring that your portfolio is diversified can be trickier than you would think. The difficulty lies in finding out whether the mutual funds you buy are what they appear to be. In other words, do they adhere to their investment style (e.g. small-cap growth, large-cap growth, small-cap value, etc.) when they pick stocks?

"Investors need to be wary of what funds do versus what they say [in their prospectuses]," says Jim Raker, a senior research analyst for Morningstar Inc., a Chicago-based company that provides data on mutual funds.

Take, for instance, the Lindner Growth Fund. It sounds like — you guessed it — a growth fund; one that buys shares in companies that should have strong future earnings growth and whose stock will appreciate in value. But in practice, says Raker, the fund leans more toward value by looking for companies that have strong businesses that have been overlooked by the market. So it may not count as a true stake in growth stocks.

You may ask: Is fussing over investment style important? One economist has found that getting the right balance of investment styles can be more important than finding money managers who are good stock-pickers.

In a watershed article published in the Journal of Portfolio Management in 1992, Nobel Prize-winning economist William Sharpe presented evidence that 85 percent to 90 percent of a fund portfolio's return is determined by investment style and only slightly — 15 to 10 percent — by specific stock selections. So it matters more that a fund focuses on large-cap value stocks than it does which large-cap value stocks it buys.

Of course, there are different methods for evaluating a fund to see if it is sticking to its stated investment objective. Because the Securities and Exchange Commission requires mutual fund companies to report their holdings only twice a year, simply monitoring a fund's holdings is not enough.

Analysts and economists approach the problem in several ways: By matching the fund's returns with the performances of indexes, by comparing a fund's returns with that of its peers, or by analyzing fundamental data on the companies in which the fund has invested. These approaches have one thing in common; they encourage investors to look beyond the descriptions that the funds give in their prospectuses to determine its true investment style.

Sharpe developed his own style-analysis software that identifies investment styles from fund returns. His technique is to look at the way a fund performs month-to-month and try to match its performance to that of two or more indexes. The mix of indexes that best matches a fund's performance defines its style.

A. Michael Lipper, president of Lipper Analytical Services, suggests that investors follow the lead of the analysts at his company. First, they label a fund according to the investment objectives laid out in its prospectus. Then they watch the fund to see if it performs differently than its supposed peers.

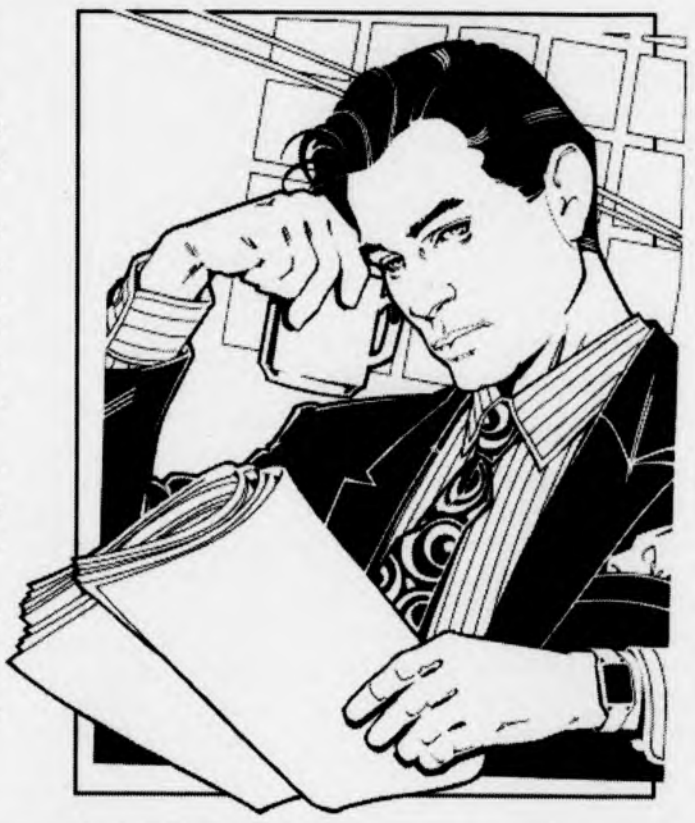
Say a small-cap value fund returns 25 percent for the year while other such funds return around 10 percent. It would be time, Lipper says, to determine whether the fund's investment approach is different than what it purports to be, and to decide whether its label should be changed accordingly.

In Lipper's book, one dalliance is not enough to get the fund yanked from its category. Sometimes a fund should remain in a category even though its current investment practices have temporarily strayed, since it may drift back to its proclaimed style. "To some degree a fund needs to be measured against what it could do as opposed to what it is doing," he says.

"There are bond funds that say they focus on long-term debt that may be largely invested in one-year paper. But you should still measure the returns against other long-term bond funds," says Lipper. However, "If they are going to continuously be in short-term paper then we would inquire why we shouldn't reclassify them," he adds.

Morningstar's approach, on the other hand, puts more emphasis on the fund's stock selections and does not pay much attention to its prospectus. In its Principia software program and in Morningstar Mutual Funds (updated bi-weekly), the company categorizes the investment style of equity funds by comparing their average market capitalization, price-to-earnings and price-to-book ratios with the Standard & Poor's 500 Index.

Morningstar makes current comparisons for some 1,500 funds in its "style box," a snapshot of how the funds are currently investing. By examining the style box, investors not only get a clearer picture of their funds' styles, they also have the most accurate context with which to compare the funds' returns. And the current labels can differ drastically from the funds' trailing three-year classifications.



As these Morningstar products are pricey, however, it's good to know that the style boxes are also available on their internet site (http://www.morningstar.net).

Discrepancies between stated and actual investment styles do not mean mutual fund companies are breaking the law. The companies usually write fund objectives that are general enough to encompass many different types of investments. This gives them flexibility in keeping their fund returns high even when the market environment turns against them.

Mutual funds may also allow themselves to be incorrectly classified so that they can be grouped with funds that let them shine. "The easiest way to stand out from the group is to be mis-categorized," says Raker.

In any case, investors can make their own decisions about the style of their funds by looking at the funds' performances and by examining data on their holdings.

Just remember, Lipper says, "Determining a fund's investment style is an art form, not a science."

Emily M. Merrill

Emily M. Merrill, 76, a 30-year resident of Norwell, died Oct. 15 at South Shore Hospital, Weymouth, after a long illness.

Born in Concord, N.H., Mrs. M[illegible]ll was daughter of the late Dr. Andrew L. MacMillan and the late Ray (Hancock) MacMillan.

She graduated from Colby College, Maine. Before moving to Norwell, she lived in Cohasset for 20 years.

Mrs. Merrill was a member of the Cohasset and Norwell Historical Societies, an active participant in St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset, and she cared for the terminally ill in Cohasset and Norwell.

Wife of the late Joseph B. Merrill, she leaves a daughter, Dana Cashin of Norwell and two granddaughters. She was also mother of the late Marjorie L. Merrill.

A Memorial Service was held at St. Andrew's Episcopal Church in Hanover. Interment was in Hanover Cemetery.

The arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home of Norwell and Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, contributions in Mrs. Merrill's memory may be made to The Alzheimer's Association of Eastern Mass., 1 Kendall Sq., Cambridge, MA 02139.

Arthur J. Dixon Jr.

Arthur J. Dixon Jr., 69, of Cohasset, a retired shipbuilder and a Navy veteran of World War II, died Oct. 4 in Hingham from asphyxiation by drowning.

Mr. Dixon had been a shipbuilder at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy for 40 years. After retiring, he did some work for several construction companies in the Boston area.

A lifelong resident of Cohasset, he attended Cohasset High School.

He was a member of the West End Men's Club.

He leaves four nephews, Michael Prendergast of Hingham, Kevin Prendergast of Cohasset, Brian Prendergast of Westbook, Maine and Daniel Prendergast of Marshfield; and eight grandnieces and grandnephews.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in St. Anthony's Church. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St.

He was a member of the Cohasset Golf Club and a former member of the Neighborhood Club, Quincy.

He was born in Springfield and graduated from Classical High School in 1944. He attended Springfield College and Harvard University.

He leaves his wife, Anna C. (O'Connor) Bartlett; four daughters, Linda Arnold of Plymouth, Debra Smith of Cohasset, Carol Harring of Woburn, Pamela Bartlett of Weymouth; and four grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 11 a.m. Friday, Oct. 31, at St. Anthony's Church. Burial will be in Massachusetts National Cemetery in Bourne.

Visiting hours are from 2 to 4 and 7 to 9 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 30, at the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St.

Police respond to 9-1-1 call for intoxicated teenager

A 13-year-old girl was taken away from a middle school dance last Friday by ambulance, police said.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the juvenile, whose name was withheld due to her age, was suffering from severe alcohol poisoning.

Police received a 9-1-1 call from a teacher who was chaperoning the dance at the school at 8:58 p.m. Police, the fire department and paramedics from South Shore Hospital responded.

Noonan said police believe the girl, who was in and out of consciousness, consumed the alcohol before coming to the dance.

"She had consumed enough alcohol to make her deathly ill," he said.

Smoking ban is eyed for Cohasset restaurants

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

People who want to smoke in a restaurant might have to leave town to do it, if the health board succeeds in banning smoking in public places.

There is a move afoot to ban smoking in restaurants and lounges, officials confirmed this week, with little opposition so far from restaurant proprietors. In fact, if the board goes ahead with new no-smoking rules, it will likely have support from the majority of restaurant owners and managers.

Perhaps sealing the smoker's fate, in a random survey of 200 residents on smoking in restaurants here, the preliminary tabulations turned up a 43 percent response among people who would either go out to eat more often or the same number of times, if Cohasset restaurants went smoke free. According to Susan Cronin of the Tobacco Control Program, so far "roughly four people would attend less often if we went smoke free."

While Cronin acknowledged her random survey did not necessarily pick out the people who are the most frequent restaurant customers, the questions did ask for information about how often the family dined out.

Moreover, Cronin said the people who eat in restaurants are not the primary target of the anti-smoking measure because the people who suffer most from second-hand smoke are restaurant staff, such as waitresses.

> "Waitresses have the highest mortality of any female occupational group."
> – SUSAN CRONIN OF THE HEALTH COLLABORATIVE.

"Waitresses have the highest mortality of any female occupational group," Cronin said, Though she was unable to define the statement's context, she did cite a 1992 University of California study which found waitresses died from lung cancer 3.5 to 4 times more often than other women and died from heart disease 2.5 times more often than other women.

The survey, which ends this week, is co-sponsored by the Cohasset health board which helped write the questions.

Most restaurants in Cohasset have already voluntarily gone 100 percent smoke-free, though one, Kimball's By the Sea, also provides a lounge for smokers where complete meals are [illegible] times served. The manager said she had no plans to change the arrangements.

At the Red Lion, where only the lounge is open this winter, the manager indicated he would like to go 100 percent smoke-free but would have to consult the owner.

Most of the small coffee shops and cafes in the village, such as Zinnia's and the Silver Spoon, already are smokeless, with one exception — the Common Place on Ripley Road, where three of the five customers at 2 p.m. Friday were smoking. The manager there said he would oppose a smoking ban.

According to health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, the board is considering a total smoking ban with an eye to stamping out cigarettes in public places for good.

Though Cohasset restaurants have been 75 percent smoke free since the late 1980's, Godzik said some people are still being exposed involuntarily to second-hand smoke which, he said, has been rated a cancer-causing substance.

Moreover, as a Class A carcinogen, Godzik said environmental tobacco smoke ranked with the "most dangerous of all" cancer agents.

Godzik also said the overall objective was to improve health.

Cohasset Town Hall makes a pitch for the environment

By Jennifer Horan
STAFF WRITER

The town of Cohasset has been living up to its commitment "to improving the environment and preserving the country's natural resources" by purchasing recycled products instead of virgin products whenever possible.

"We're going the recycled route," Town Administrator Mark Haddad said of the new attitude at town hall.

The board of selectmen voted unanimously last month to adopt a policy for the town's departments to make every effort to buy supplies made of recyclable materials, including copier paper, stationary, binders, folders, toner cartridges, paper towels, tissues, plastic trash bags, paint, carpet with recycled fibers, floor tiles, insulation, re-refined automotive oil and anti-freeze and retread tires.

Haddad said town employees are making strides to abide by the new policy. All of the offices have already switched to recycled copier paper, he said. Crews completed a recent painting project at town hall using recycled paint, he said. And the special town meeting warrant was printed on recycled paper, he added.

"We think recycling is important and we have to do our best to try to preserve our natural resources," he said. "This is a way to do it."

Town employees have been pitching in on the other side of the recycling effort by disposing of all white paper in the designated recycling bins at town hall, he said.

Offer of breathalyzer for school dances refused

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Underage drinking is a touchy subject in Cohasset these days.

Last month, the schools were on the defensive after unfounded rumors about drinking at school dances reached the ears of the Drug and Alcohol Committee. More recently, on the news a middle school student was a victim of alcohol poisoning at a dance here last week, school officials are concerned parents might over-react to a serious but isolated episode.

But as the schools, law enforcement and parents grapple with the short list of solutions, police and the school administration appear to be in separate camps philosophically on the question of underage drinking, as a spurned offer from the police chief might illustrate.

The spurned offer was of a breathalyzer which the chief was replacing. A similar machine is currently in use at Hingham school dances. According to the assistant principal there, Mike Donnell, the breathalyzer has successfully worked as a deterrent and is used only in cases where a student appears to be drunk or impaired.

But the Cohasset schools turned it down when Police Chief Brian Noonan offered the department's old breathalyzer free.

And the chairwoman of the Drug and Alcohol Committee, which discussed the breathalyzer option at one of its meetings, drew a blank when the subject was mentioned. Margo Aitken said in her view, if parents took the time to check on their children and know their whereabouts, that would be the best way to stop teens from drinking.

Veterans reach accord over war memorial

By Margo Sullivan

When Old Glory is hoisted atop the Town Common flagpole Monday, during a Veteran's Day morning dedication ceremony, the men who salute the colors might seem a bit more united than they have been over the past few years.

Or perhaps just a bit less vocal about the issues that have divided them.

Thursday, an accord was reached between two camps of old soldiers who have disagreed, sometimes bitterly, about the list of names that belonged on the War Memorial which is planted on town property at Cohasset Harbor.

At issue was a gap in the dates between

No shortage of enthusiasm at Turkey Hill opening

By Mary Ford

It worked. That's what an incredulous group of windswept town and state officials and private citizens said atop Turkey Hill on Saturday.

Not even gusts of 30 mph and a driving rain could dampen the spirits of the 60 people on hand for the official "opening" of the 50 acres of undeveloped land that straddles Hingham and Cohasset. On a clear day, there is a spectacular view of Boston and the North Shore from the hilltop which is now accessible from a parking area off Route 3A near the Hingham/Cohasset town line.

In an unprecedented joint effort between the former owner, three private land trusts, the state and two towns — the coastal drumlin which got its name from

Volunteers for private ways committee

Selectmen are seeking two more individuals to serve on the private ways committee. Interested citizens should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900.

Selectmen plan to ask the committee for a report and will consider hiring a professional to help the committee deal with private ways issues which can be complicated.

'Pay per throw' trash system

Selectman Merle Brown said the recycling committee plans to hold more public hearings on the "pay per throw" trash system being proposed. His remarks were in response to a letter from the Chisholms, 605 Jerusalem Rd., which was critical of the concept which involves residents buying special bags instead of paying for dump stickers.

"We recycle in a reasonable way. Most people do," the Chisholms wrote. "Our recycling efforts have put us way up on the state's list of concerned residents. We don't have to be No. 1!"

The pay-per-bag program is supposed to encourage more recycling.

Stay tuned to the Cohasset Mariner for dates of hearings on the pay-per-bag program.

In a related matter, selectmen unanimously agreed to appoint Mary Earon, 29 Gammons Rd., to the recycling committee. Any other citizens interested in serving should contact Brown or Town Manager Mark Haddad at the selectmen's office, 383-9900.

Village sign needed

At the request of Selectman Merle Brown, the town will ask the state to replace the "village" sign at the Beechwood/3A intersection. Before the intersection was redesigned last summer, there was a sign directing traffic to Cohasset Village.

Old fire station to be razed

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Monday that the town will spend $8,500 to raze the old North Cohasset Fire Station on Hull Street.

Once the building is down, the area will be loamed and seeded, he said.

Restoring harmony to the hilltop

What the hilltop looked like in the late 1800s. The Vanderweil house is second from right. At right is a cottage that was razed in the 1940s and replaced later with the ranch that was moved to Hull last week. At center is the house at 498 Jerusalem that was torn down in 1991. Victorian era revisited at ocean-front estate

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

When Mary Hartshorne saw what was happening at the corner of Jerusalem Road and Forest Avenue last week she grabbed the telephone.

"I couldn't wait to tell Anne (Vanderweil) that I was jubilant," the Border Street resident recalled.

Hartshorne whose great grandfather Edwin Pope bought the hilltop — where the Vanderweils now live — and built an estate there more than 125 years ago, was thrilled to see the post World War II ranch surrounded by 1870 Victorian homes go.

The Vanderweils, who live at 500 Jerusalem Road, spent $610,000 for the land and ranch house next door where a large Victorian summer cottage once stood. They had the house moved about a mile down the road to a vacant lot in Hull last Tuesday where it will be put back together and sold.

Reached at her home in Weymouth, Loretta Francis, who lived in the ranch for 27 years and sold it to the Vanderweils, declined to comment.

"Years ago, they moved them like billiard balls."
— DAVID WADSWORTH, HISTORICAL SOCIETY CURATOR

Gary Vanderweil, who owns a Boston engineering company, said the 50-year-old ranch didn't fit with the architecture in the neighborhood.

"We were about to embark on a major renovation to convert it to a two-story Victorian cottage," he said. "Then we noticed a piece of land in Hull and thought it would be a great site for the house. So we thought, why don't we just move it." The area at Forest Avenue and Jerusalem Road where the house stood will be landscaped, Vanderweil said.

This wasn't the first time the Vanderweils made a significant change to the hilltop where their expansive gray Victorian house with widow's walk overlooks the Atlantic Ocean.

The 15-acre Pope estate also included a "twin" to the Vanderweil house at 498 Jerusalem Road. The Vanderweils bought that house six years ago for nearly $890,000 and had it torn down.

The house had been renovated by the prior owner, James Read, who bought it in 1989. Read quadrupled its size and did a construction job that was totally incompatible, destroying the balance and harmony of the hilltop, Vanderweil said.

"It almost looked like a hotel up there," he said.

Hartshorne, 69, grew up on the Pope estate which included tennis courts, stables, formal gardens, and a meadow where cows grazed.

"It was a nice life on that corner," she recalled. "Imagine me as a little child having that as a playground," she said.

But as times changed, Hartshorne's father, Prescott Thayer Cumner, found it necessary in the late 1940s to raze the Victorian summer house at 510 Jerusalem.

"It was a summer house and the taxes were high, so he had it torn down to be able to sell the property," Hartshorne said. The subsequent owner built the ranch on the foundation of the old house.

Hartshorne supports the Vanderweils' efforts to bring Victorian character back to the hilltop.

"My great grandfather bought the land in pieces and put it all together and fixed it up in the latest fashion for his daughters (Nellie Pope Cumner and Martha Pope Cutler). But times change and family fortunes change and it was sold off.

"Now to see the Vanderweils put it back and turn it into something wonderful. I'm thrilled," she said.

David Wadsworth, curator the Cohasset Historical Society, said moving houses is nothing new.

"Years ago, they moved them like billiard balls," he said.

Wadsworth said town hall records show selectmen giving permission to move houses over and over again especially from the old summer estates.

In fact, part of the second Black Rock House which once stood on Jerusalem Road across from the Vanderweils is now a house on Atlantic Avenue in Hull.

"Some of the room numbers are still on the doors," he said.

Anne Vanderweil said when they bought their house in 1981 they didn't anticipate buying the properties on either side.

"That was never our intent. But we were faced with two unique challenges which we treated differently.

"Had we known what was in store back in 1981, we might have house hunted elsewhere," she laughed.

COHASSET'S WEEK

New manager at Red Lion

Selectmen approved a change of manager on the Red Lion Inn's liquor license this week.

Joseph Dooley, who managed the Inn from 1990-96, is excited about the future of the establishment.

He said when renovations are completed the Inn will be a full-fledged inn and restaurant and not the "bar" in town.

"It's going to be an old New England inn like it should be," Dooley said.

Lobster Lab RFP needs work

Selectmen told Town Manager Mark Haddad to rework the request for proposal for the Lobster Lab proposed for the Hagerty house on Parker Avenue.

Selectman Diane Sullivan urged the board to be reasonable and not ask for information in the RFP that the applicant would have no way of knowing at this time.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris agreed that it was time to shift the emphasis of the RFP away from programs and focus it on construction and a timetable to move the project along.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would redraft the RFP taking the board's concerns into consideration and have a new draft ready for the Nov. 17 selectmen's meeting.

Voters at the special town meeting supported issuing a new RFP for the Lobster Lab rather than have the Hagerty house razed.

Zoning board preparing decision on quonset huts

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Quonset huts and buildings at 430 South Main St. believed by neighbors to be the ugliest structure in Cohasset, could be razed soon if the zoning board approves the owner's compromise development plan.

The owner of the property, Noel Collins, has proposed tearing down all the buildings and building five condominiums: two with two units and one single-unit.

If the zoning board approves the project, it could end a battle that dates back nearly 40 years.

The zoning board is expected to issue a written decision on the Quonset huts at its Nov. 13 meeting.

Collins is cautious about the outcome.

"The zoning board definitely did seem favorable to the plan at its last meeting," Collins said. "I eagerly await their decision."

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said five units could be a favorable compromise.

We told him shortly after we denied 10 that we would look at four," DeGiacomo said. "He came back with six, and we said we would look at four. He returned with five and we said, 'okay, we'll look at it'."

DeGiacomo added that five units would be far superior to 10, especially in terms of density on the site. Current zoning regulations allow for only one home on the site, but condominiums are a little different.

"We're restricted by zoning regulations, and we're really stretching to get this," DeGiacomo said. "But taking into consideration what is there now, if we can take a pre-existing, non-conforming property and return it to a residential use, then that's a good thing."

Collins bought the 54,000 sq. ft. lot in 1996 with the intention of converting it from a commercial site to residential condominiums.

The property is a non-conforming use, zoned for commercial use in a primarily residential neighborhood. Because the buildings pre-date zoning regulations, the property was "grandfathered" and allowed to remain a commercial use.

> "The zoning board definitely did seem favorable to the plan at its last meeting. I eagerly await their decision."
> — NOEL COLLINS, OWNER.

A number of different commercial businesses have used the location for decades.

Currently, Collins maintains a law office at the site and rents space to six tenants.

Collins proposed tearing down the Quonset huts and building ten condominiums, but the zoning board rejected his request in Nov., 1996, citing density concerns.

Collins appealed the decision to Norfolk Superior Court, but tried to settle the matter out-of-court, asking for six units instead of 10.

The zoning board rejected Collins' request. Members would agree on only four units as a settlement.

But Collins said he couldn't afford to develop the property with only four units.

With five units, Collins hopes he has found the magic number that will settle the zoning dispute while still allowing him and partner Anthony D. Catlin to turn a profit.

The homes would be New England style colonials in the $350,000 to $400,000 range.

Collins said neighbors fully support his development plan, and at least one agrees.

Corinne Cahill lives two houses over from the structure, and has been lobbying the town to change the property's use since 1959. She said she is part of an unofficial neighborhood group of about 15 families that hopes the zoning board will approve five units.

"We are 100 percent behind Noel Collins," Cahill said. "This is a beautiful, residential neighborhood plagued by an ugly, industrial property, and I am primarily interested in having it converted to a residential use."

Over the years, Cahill has put up with 18-wheelers, loud machinery, early morning deliveries, 24-hour shifts, noise and air pollution.

Now, she has great hopes that the end is near for of all these problems.

Cahill said Collins is the first developer to come along with the intention of converting the property to a residential use.

"Noel Collins has had tremendous expenses involved with this project on this property with permits and engineering and other costs," Cahill said. "But he's the first developer to try and convert the property to residential use, and he has stayed committed to this."

Cahill said the last time she attended a zoning board meeting, members seemed agreeable to five units and the atmosphere was positive.

The planning board tried to rezone the site earlier this year so Collins could build 10 condominiums, but voters at the 1997 spring town meeting rejected the proposal.

Members of the conservation commission said the change in bylaws would have stripped them of their jurisdiction over the nearby flood plain.

The conservation commission has supported Collins' latest plan and has issued an order of conditions.

The planning board has supported any plan that converts the property to a residential use.

The planning board was scheduled to discuss the property last night after the Mariner went to press.

The board of health must approve the septic system planned for the units. Collins is scheduled to go before the health board on Nov. 12.

The land sits on the edge of the water and, according to Collins, is a "beautiful, stunning and exquisite" site for residential property.

"It will be a real beauty of a project to see what it looks like if it's approved," Collins said.

If Collins receives approval from the zoning board and all the necessary permits, he said he would like to begin construction in early December.

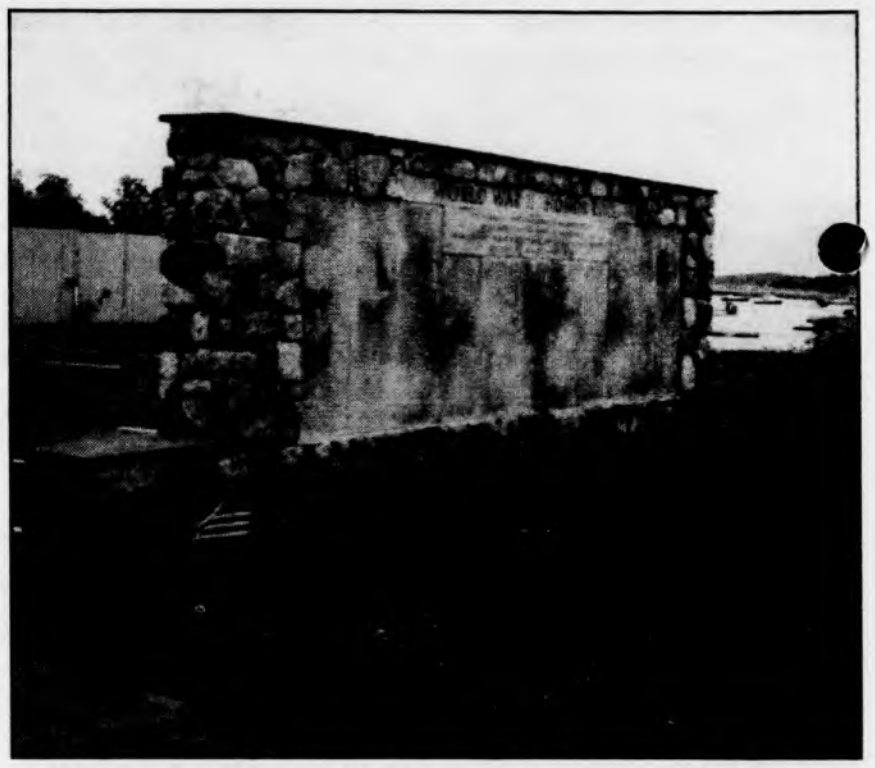
V-J Day fell Aug. 14, 1945 and Dec. 31, 1946 when Congress officially declared the end of the war. Although the U.S. Government has long recognized men who enlisted in the armed forces after V-J Day as World War II veterans, that was not the opinion held by Austin Ahearn, the Cohasset man who got the World War II Honor built..

Previously, Ahearn, the head of the privately-funded Cohasset Military Memorial, Inc., planned to exclude the names of those who served in the armed forces after V-J Day because the combat was over by the time they enlisted,

Then in 1993 the selectmen and others objected to the omissions after the monument was largely built. After two years of wrangling and review by a new board specifically formed to resolve the dispute, an agreement was finally reached in 1995 to add a new granite panel to the World War II Honor Roll with the names of the men who served after the combat was over.

But nothing happened when the sides could not compromise over the wording to describe the term of service after V-J Day or the space where the panel should be installed.



Now, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad, Ahearn has agreed to shepherd a new proposal to his board of directors, with an eye to going out to bid for a contractor. The new scheme will find room on the Honor Roll wall by removing some wording that "should not have been there," as Veterans of Foreign Wars head Ralph Peroncello put it, though he did not get specific and stopped far short of claiming victory.

In fact, Peroncello held out an olive branch of sorts when he offered the observation it would be almost impossible to undertake a task the scope of the Honor Roll without eventually making someone unhappy.

"It's pretty well settled now," Peroncello said, although he did not expect to see the plaque for the "extended honor roll" go up until spring.

As for Ahearn, while he confirmed the matter had been "resolved," he did not want to comment about the details.

"I'm in the process of getting the plaques," he said. "I'm not going to tell you anymore."

AT RIGHT—The Veterans Memorial at the harbor should have additional panels including the names of those who served in the occupational forces by springtime, local veterans say.

Breathalyzer for school dances refused

Aitken also said her board would not advocate the use of the breathalyzer, and the high school principal was even stronger in his dismissal of the law enforcement tool.

"I think people are in a state of mild hysteria," said Cohasset High principal Curtis Collins. Though Collins said he personally did not turn down the breathalyzer, he would prefer to stop the school dances rather than use one if drinking becomes a problem.

"I wouldn't be interested in a breathalyzer," Collins said. "If we have to do that, I'm not interested in holding the dances."

Collins said the school dances are generally well run, and some issues raised by the Drug and Alcohol Committee were resolved when the board members observed the situation for themselves.

"Sometimes erroneous information spreads," said Cohasset High health education director Mike Gill who confirmed the one case of alcohol poisoning but denied rumors that large numbers of students were arriving at school dances drunk.

"We have 12 or 15 adults here looking for signs of students who have been drinking," he said, ticking off the routine at the school dances.

Nonetheless, teenage drinking, he said, is a problem with a long history, and is not unknown in Cohasset, where reputedly the average youth first gets drunk at age 13 years 7 months, according to Gill's estimate.

Though Gill was more open to the idea of a breathalyzer than the principal, he said for now, the school planned to push education to get the anti-drug and liquor message out. On Nov. 17, the school is holding a Parent Forum where the topic of alcohol, drug abuse will be discussed, he said.

As for the police chief, he summed up the breathalyzer option in two words.

"Forget it," Noonan said.

While Noonan is no longer offering the schools the breathalyzer, he still believes the trends show more youngsters are drinking to get drunk at earlier ages. On Halloween, police confiscated two big jugs of Puerto Rican rum when they arrested a minor and two juveniles in the town parking lot on an otherwise quiet and uneventful night.

The Captain Morgan Rum is called "handles" in slang to describe the big 1.75 liter carrying handle. At a price just under $20, a big bottle of the affordable high-proof fuel has become the brew of choice with underage drinkers.

More important, they might also be but one more worrisome sign that parents, school and law officials have yet to get a handle on the problem of teenage drinking.

Specifically, the popularity of handles, Noonan said, might be the sign of an alarming trend if teens turn out to be drinking to get drunk more often. At 70-proof strength, this brand of hard liquor has far more alcohol content than beer and wine, the chief said.

Newtonville estimate causes a stir

An estimate of $8,890 for Tutela Engineering to conduct an analysis of site conditions for wastewater treatment in the Newtonville neighborhood off Atlantic Avenue was dismissed by Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Haddad told selectmen he "vehemently" protested the estimate.

"I discussed this with Domenic Tutela and we are in agreement that this is not the price. They will come back with something more palatable," he said.

Selectman Diane Sullivan was concerned that the town was paying for the site inspections.

But the consensus among the other selectmen was that this is part of the sewer project.

"I see this as an extension of the town-wide sewer analysis," Selectman Nan Roth said.

The board of health declared a state of emergency in the Newtonville neighborhood last summer when unacceptable levels of fecal coliform from septic systems there was discovered. The residents and health board want the houses hooked up to the sewer system but the sewer commission has insisted on Title V inspections before that would be considered. The commission did agree, however, to allow Tutela to conduct an analysis of the problem. A report from Tutela should be available within a couple of weeks.

FONE MEMORIAL SERVICE

We heard from Ken and Sue Fone this week, and all of the plans have been finalized for his Dad's ("pop" Fone's) memorial service. It will be held in the Chapel of the Second Congregational Church Saturday, Nov. 15, at 11 a.m. Pop was a Cohasset resident from 1968 to 1995, some of his close friends are still around, and everyone is invited to attend the service. The Rev. Gary Ritts will be performing the service, and Ken and Sue will, of course, be there; Pop's remains have been buried with Ken's mother and brother in the Mt. Wollaston Cemetery.

AN ELEGANT EVENING

The Cohasset Education Foundation held an elegant evening to celebrate education last weekend, and what an evening it was! It was an idea that was an old-fashioned-type concept, a progressive dinner! Cocktails and hors' douevres were served at the beautiful home of Roger and Andrea Wade; dinner was at the grand home of Michael and Victoria Hurley, and dessert was hosted by Peter and Midge Stone. There was a silent auction to assist in the fund-raising - a spectacular night indeed, with all of the proceeds benefiting our children's education! The CEF, the homeowners and the committee are to be commended for their time and efforts in helping our schools to help our students!

END OF AN ERA

It was the end of an era for Cohasset this week, Ken Coleman's house was sold! For so many years Ken has been a Cohassetite, and we have loved hearing his voice on the radio on one day, only to see him "around town" the next to tell him what we thought about the game that he had announced. According to what we have heard on the radio, Ken makes his home in Plymouth now, and we want to wish him and his family the best (and hope to see him often). He is a legend!

WELCOME HOME BOB!

Speaking of legends, we understand that Bob Healy came home from the hospital this week, and we surely hope that he makes continued good progress. He is one special man who always had a kind word and lots of patience with so many - especially when he worked at the Cohasset Hardware store and had to help people distinguish between a nut and a bolt!

CHITTICK ART EXHIBIT

Good news for all of you JoAnne Chittick art fans! Joanne is part of a special exhibit at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery - her opening reception was Nov. 2, and her art will be displayed from then until Nov. 30. Gallery hours are Wednesday to Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. It is closed Mondays. The Scituate Art Association Gallery is located at 131 Front St. in Scituate. Don't miss this, all of Joanne's best will be there, and she is one spectacular artist!

DESIGNER CLOTHING SALE

We received a note from Stephanie Church, the program director at the South Shore Community Center, and they have a fund-raiser coming up that all of you young moms won't want to miss - they are going to hold a designer children's clothing sale Nov. 10 from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. at the Community Center. E-I-E-I-O is the terrific clothes maker, the clothes are sold at the most prestigious department stores, catalogs and specialty stores in America. The sale will be for one day only. Wait until you see the wonderful designs, and how well the clothing is made! Be sure to bring grandparents, they will fall in love with the unique styles, and their whole Christmas list can be completed in one stop! Mark the calendar now, everyone benefits from this fund-raiser! All proceeds from the sale will go toward the purchases of mats for the center.

CONGO CAPERS IS COMING

JoJo Fichtner asks that all members of the Second Congregational Church be reminded of the auditions for "Congo Capers," taking place Nov. 11. She promises that it will be lots of work and lots of fun, and she wants all to be there - JoJo has a way of bringing out talent in everyone, even if you don't think that you possess any! Auditions will be at the Cohasset High School auditorium, from 6 to 9 p.m. (sign up in Bates Hall).

WELCOME TO MADISON PRATT!

Of course you know that JoJo has just added another dancer to her troupe, her brand new granddaughter! Madison Harley Pratt is her name, and she was born Oct. 30. Mom and Dad are doing just fine (Lisa and Jeffrey), and big sister Logan cannot wait for them to come home so she can help Mom! Grandparents Ruth and Carleton Pratt are thrilled, and JoJo has probably created a skit with a baby part in it as you read this! We certainly congratulate you all!

Turkey Hill celebration

Never has being all wet been so much fun.

In fact, there was an abundance of smiles under a tent atop Turkey Hill in the middle of a nor'easter on Saturday.

The event went ahead despite the weather and an advertised rain date because those involved apparently couldn't contain their enthusiasm.

And who can blame them?

It's not every day that three private land trusts, the state, two towns, and a landowner work together to bring about something wonderful. See related story page one.

Thanks to the dedication and "can do" attitude of this large group, which also included 300 private donors, Turkey Hill is preserved for posterity.

If you haven't been up to Turkey Hill, make it a point to go. The view is breathtaking and you might even spot a wild turkey or two. Turkeys returned to the area in the past year or so.

A new parking lot is now conveniently located off Route 3A near the Hingham and Cohasset town line. As Katherine Morrison of the Hingham Land Conservation Trust said, the walk from 3A is a little steep but worth it.

"You earn the view," she said.

For those who prefer less of a climb, there's another way up off Turkey Hill lane (which is off Leavitt Street) in Hingham

We marvel at the cooperation and heartily congratulate all involved with this very worthwhile project.

As Martha Gjesteby of Cohasset said, "It would be a better world if we'd cooperate on everything else."

Valerie Talmage of Hingham and Tom Foster, regional director of the Trustees of Reservations, lead the grand opening celebration at Turkey Hill on Saturday.

Boy Scouts are thanked

To the Editor:

I would like to thank Boy Scout Troop 28 for the six picnic tables they built for the courtyard of the Deer Hill School as a project that was part of the Make a Difference Day. This day was originally scheduled for Saturday, Oct. 25, but, because of the rain, the date was postponed to Saturday, Nov. 1. The scouts worked Oct. 25 inside in the cafeteria to put the tables together and then moved them into the courtyard.

The teachers will be able to use the eight-foot tables as an outdoor classroom during good weather. The tables also may become an extension of our cafeteria and be used as a place to have lunch. Two of the tables have been designed to accommodate a person who may be in a wheelchair.

The Scout leaders for this project were: Phil Lehr, Bob Dennis and Wayne Schmidt. The scouts working on the tables were: Conor Avery, Andy Dennis, Rob Lehr, Justin Maitland, Scott McArthur, Will McArthur, Alex Schmidt and Mike Snowdale.

Any boys, ages 11 to 18, who may be interested in Scout projects to help the community or any other information about scouting, may call Mr. Lehr at 383-1975.

Again, thank you to the young men who helped make the Deer Hill School a better place for the students and staff.

'Anti-rail factions took over Greenbush hearing'

To the Editor:

Carol Britton Meyer's article on the Greenbush train hearing would have been more accurate had it started off: Some 245 residents of Hingham and five from neighboring towns packed Hingham Town Hall.

Hingham does not need the train and the hearing seemed to be orchestrated by the Hingham anti-train forces to allow them to dominate the discussion to the exclusion of those further south who do not have the convenient access to the train or MBTA bus service enjoyed in Hingham. The process started before the hearing with Hingham officials having an uninterrupted hour to show the committee members around town and make their case as to how the train would destroy Hingham Square.

Then, in the hearing, probably many of the same people again stepped to the head of the line along with representatives of various anti-train groups to make their case.

To expand in detail I have enclosed a copy of something I faxed to the Ledger writer after the frustration of seeing those supporting the train had virtually no opportunity for being heard.

Train opponents have legitimate concerns, but I think these concerns need to be examined in the light of the other successful trains surrounding Boston. What is different here and is that difference great enough to deprive the Greenbush people of the same level of service provided commuters as far away as Rockport, Fitchburg and Lakeville?

Is there another alternative which will work? I have not heard of anything that can come anywhere near what the train will be able to do. Most of eastern Massachusetts has far superior public transportation service to Boston than those in the Greenbush corridor. Greenbush Commuter Rail Service seems to be the only practical way to end that unfair discrimination.

LETTERS

Time to act with courage

To the Editor:

This is an Open Letter to Mary Jeanette Murray:

Children, it seems, are faced with moral dilemmas on an almost daily basis. The trials and tribulations of growing up force children to regularly confront temptation, disobedience and a variety of other challenges. If dealt with properly, these challenges hopefully mold our children into good, decent people with a firm understanding of right and wrong. Adults, on the other hand, although far from finished products, are faced with such challenges far less frequently. Faced with a new set of challenges of paying bills, meeting deadlines and beating rush hour, it seems that we hardly have the time to explore moral dilemmas, challenge our assumptions or work to improve ourselves as people.

It is with this backdrop that you, as our representative, must deal with the issue of the death penalty vote. It is exceedingly rare that the vote of a governmental representative deals in absolutes. It is even more rare that such a vote is, at its core, purely a moral choice. But with your vote on the death penalty, it is your views of morality — nothing more and nothing less — that is at issue. Whether fortunate or unfortunate, you must now confront that issue.

The question, of course, is whether there is a clear moral position on this issue. If it could be shown that the taking of a murderer's life actually saved the lives of innocent people, such an argument provides powerful support for the death penalty. You, as my representative, act as God everyday in the disposition of your duties. Making that decision is merely another, albeit starker, example of that power. Were such an argument realistically available, you would have my full support for your vote in favor of capital punishment.

Based upon my understanding, however, there is no evidence to indicate that capital punishment acts as a deterrent for future crime. Life imprisonment without parole certainly protects society from the particular offender. As such, and as articulated recently by many people, the sole motivation for instituting the death penalty is to act upon our impulse for revenge. The desire for revenge is certainly understandable. We all feel it, even when our own young ones are not involved. If I lost my child, I have no doubt that revenge would be one of many extremely intense feelings with which I would have to deal.

But that reason, standing by itself, cannot justify the taking of human life. Each of us was taught, as children, that it is wrong to act out of revenge. That to do so is, at its core, an immoral act. None of us being perfect, we certainly have acted out of revenge in the past. I know that I have. When I did so, it was out of the passion of the moment. I lost control. I lost sight of right and wrong. But I was embarrassed by my behavior, I apologized for it, and I sought to correct it in the future. Being imperfect, I cannot promise that it will never happen again.

This situation, however, is different. In this case, you are making a cold, calculating decision. You are not in the throes of passion. You have all your senses. You presumably are well informed. You have been given the opportunity to make a clear, reasoned decision. I understand that it is extremely difficult as an elected official to ignore the feelings of the apparent majority of your district. But, in the end, you were elected as a leader. And, in the end, a leader must do what is morally correct. Now, more than ever, is the time to act with courage.

I know you have voted consistently in favor of the death penalty in the past. By all accounts, you will have an opportunity to vote again. Before you do so, however, I ask that you search in your heart for the correct decision. Take the action that we can explain to our children. When the time comes to act again, please do the right thing.

ASK THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE

Grants add up to good news

The Cohasset School Department has been quite successful over the years in winning grants from Federal and state agencies, private foundations and corporations. For the current fiscal year, we already have been awarded ten grants in the total amount of $295,000. Funds from some of these grants directly offset the need for increased tax revenues, while funds from some other grants enhance the educational opportunities we can provide to the school children of Cohasset at no cost to the taxpayer. For example, one $10,000 competitive grant from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts Department of Education is providing professional development funding for teachers preparing to implement the new K-12 curriculum frameworks. A second competitive grant in the amount of $5,335 is supporting special education curriculum development.

One recent grant will illustrate how major, system-wide school committee goals are turned into action plans by members of the administrative and teaching staffs seeking grants to support achievement of our goals. In this case, the goal is to begin a pilot program to explore the possibility of providing Personal Progress Plans for all children in the school system. Personal Progress Plans would be modeled on the legally-mandated Individual Education Plan ("IEP"), which is provided for each child in a special education program. Personal Progress Plans, like IEPs, would be constructed by a team of teachers, experts and parents (and even the student when he or she is old enough to participate) and would prescribe in some detail the teaching and learning approaches to be used with a particular child, as well as set measurable goals and objectives for that child. The goal of such a program would be to maximize achievement for all students on an individual basis. The $7,500 competitive grant, awarded to the Osgood School by the Department of Education, will fund a program in curriculum development aimed at exploring our ability to provide this type of plan, first for a small group of children who are not enrolled in a special education program, and ultimately for every child in the school system.

Another recent grant supported the on-going efforts of the school department to provide comprehensive health education for all children of Cohasset. This grant also illustrates excellent collaboration among the Cohasset Schools, the Cohasset Police, the Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee, the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative, the churches, the Health Education Advisory Committee and a large group of volunteers. Project Safeguard, a full-day program of lectures, demonstrations and discussions on a variety of substance abuse topics, was funded with grants designed to confront all seventh grade students and their parents with the realities of drug and alcohol use and abuse in our society.

The Cohasset School Committee is deeply committed to seeking alternative sources of funding for the operation of the school department and the achievement of our goals. We are proud of the success our administrators and teachers have had in winning grants and grateful for the many hours they spend in the grant seeking process.

This is one in a monthly series of columns by the Cohasset School Committee.

Support for Learning Lab

To the Editor:

At the Oct. 27 town meeting, as well as on many previous occasions, I have been puzzled by the selectmen's reticence to implement a Learning Laboratory at the Hagerty site. Selectman Nan Roth suggested that there is simply no "proven need" for it.

I wonder, what constitutes proof, and why is "proof" needed? Let's look around town. While there wasn't a proven need for the Sailing Club, it has been enjoyed by hundreds, (maybe thousands) in the years since public-spirited citizens established it. There wasn't a "proven" need to improve Milliken Field, but our children and town are well-served by its enhancement. There wasn't a "proven" need for an Arts Center, but clearly it benefits many people.

What definitely is not proven is the need for more parking spaces on the Hagerty property, or the need to sacrifice the potential service of the building to our students to gain a few spaces. Many observers have noted that the lot is not fully utilized even on busy summer weekends. It's hard to believe that this is because "some boat owners don't know that there is a ramp there."

Students (of any age) benefit greatly when book knowledge translates into real-life experiences. What an opportunity we have to provide a hands-on learning facility that will make a valuable difference to our town, enriching and broadening our educational resources.

For a coastal community in particular, I believe the Learning Lab is a "needed" and natural fit.

No shortage of enthusiasm at Turkey Hill opening

the wild turkeys that once roamed there is now preserved forever for passive public recreation.

"I think everyone's smiling anyway," said Hingham's Valerie Talmage, one of the prime movers behind the acquisition project, about the fall nor'easter whipping at the sides of the marquee set up for the celebration.

It all began about two years ago when the Trustees of Reservations, a private group, started discussions with Joseph Sapanaro, whose family had owned the property for 50 years.

"The trustees and I spoke about a plan to make the land available to the public," said Sapanaro, a Winchester resident. "I thought about it for a long time. Then I decided it's a good thing to do because I'm part of the public, too."

What followed were negotiations that involved Sapanaro, the Trustees, the towns of Hingham and Cohasset, the state Department of Environmental Affairs, and the Hingham and Cohasset land conservation trusts. Upwards of 300 individuals also contributed money to help make the purchase possible. Once the land was purchased, the former Nike missile installation at the site had to cleaned up. The missiles were part of a secure military reservation used during the cold-war era.

State environmental affairs Secretary Trudy Coxe said in light of rapid development in the state, preserving land as open space is more important than ever.

"We need to make sure the children of the next generation have a place to play," she said.

Talmage and Tom Foster, regional director for the Trustees, with microphone in tow, made their way around the inside perimeter of the tent thanking everyone and asking representatives from each of the participating towns and land trusts to speak. Talmage bestowed the "order of the Turkey" (a cardboard turkey at the end of green ribbon) to the various assembled group leaders.

It was light-hearted fun on a very spirited afternoon when those committed to the project vacillated between laughter and tears.

Cohasset's Jack Hubbard, who died last spring, was warmly remembered. Hubbard, a conservationist, provided the lift needed when the task at hand seemed insurmountable.

"This was really Jack's project," said John Hartshorne of the Cohasset Land Conservation Trust. "We all participated but Jack led. It didn't just happen, it was very iffy at times.

"Jack made the difference by giving us the gentle but firm push at an important moment," he said.

An inscribed granite bench dedicated to Hubbard now sits at the crest of the hill.

The $810,000 Turkey Hill price tag was estimated to be $100,000 less than the property's assessed valuation.

Hingham town meeting agreed to spend $164,500 for the 30 acres of Turkey Hill on the Hingham side and Cohasset voters appropriated $125,000 for the 20 acres on their side of the town line. The state kicked in $450,000 with the remainder coming from the private land trusts and individual donations.

Turkey Hill will expand the existing greenbelt that now consists of the 800-acre Thayer and Whitney Woods and 2,900-acre Wompatuck State Park and will eventually include Weir River Farm's 82 acres, which will be bequeathed to the Trustees.

Hingham conservationist Phil Swanson explained that Turkey Hill was actually a gift from a glacier which deposited masses of clay which has impeded modern development.

"Drumlins don't perc very well," he said.

Cohasset's Martha Gjesteby said the effort to preserve Turkey Hill is a testament to cooperation among neighbors.

"It would be a better world, if we'd cooperate in everything else," she said.

Turkeys return to Turkey Hill

Wild turkeys are back on Turkey Hill, local observers say.

Al Yazenezian, superintendent with the Trustees of Reservations, lives in the former Saponaro house on the 50-acre property.

Yazenezian says there could be as many as 35 "in the neighborhood."

According to James Cardoza, wildlife biologist with the state Division of Fisheries and Wildlife, the wild turkey, which was common in Colonial times completely disappeared from New England in the 1800s.

After two unsuccessful attempts, the wild turkey was successfully reintroduced to Massachusetts in the Berkshires in the early 1970s and in Plymouth County two years ago. Their population in the state today is upwards of 12,000.

"It has been a very successful wildlife management program," he said.

Cardoza said wild turkeys like to live hard wood forests interspersed with fields where they can find berries and seeds. They love acorns and roost in trees, he said.

Flag raising on new pole is Monday at 11 a.m. on town common

A special flag raising is planned for 11 a.m. Monday on the town common.

Commemorating Veterans' Day, members of the George H. Mealy American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars posts will be on hand for the raising of the flag for the first time on the new town flagpole. The 80-foot fiber glass pole with internal works is a gift from the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank and it represents the fourth flagpole on the common, the third at this location. The first was installed by W. B. Johnson in 1861 further south in front of town hall. The original pole at the present site was 100 feet tall and was installed in 1915 in memory of George C. Crocker and was a gift from the Crocker family.

In about 1940, the pole was replaced with an 80-foot one, which was taken down last summer after a painter discovered an area of dry rot near its base.

Pilgrim Cooperative's gifts to the town in recent years include the flagpole, restoration of the clock face at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, the MacIver Reddie murals in the library rotunda depiciting the history of Cohasset and the electronic scoreboard for the athletic field at Cohasset High School.

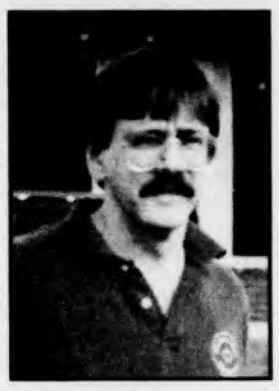
MARINER ON THE STREET

Should smoking be banned in Cohasset restaurants and lounges, as the Health Board could soon propose?



"I'd be all for it. I hate smoke."

— Joe Dooley, manager of the Red Lion Inn, 71 S. Main St.

"It really doesn't matter because our clientele doesn't require smoking. We don't have ashtrays. I've been here two months, and no one's ever asked to smoke."

- Edward Brunoli, manager of Atlantic Bagel and Coffee, 166 King St.

"It's too small" (for a smoking area).

- Anne Gabanelle, owner of French Memories, 64 S. Main St.

"I've always been smoke free since the day I opened. I was a smoker, but now I'm aware how much it bothers people. I'm one of those who make a big scene now, too."

- Lynn McVay, owner of Zinnia's Cafe, 35 S. Main St.

"We have been 100 percent smoke free voluntarily since we opened. The shop is too small to segregate, and I guess I personally don't enjoy a smoking environment."

— Denise Bismore, Owner of the Silver Spoon Cafe, 5 S. Main St.

"Some of my customers smoke."

- Rich Piasecki, manager of The Common Room, 107 Ripley Rd.

"It has been 100 percent smoke free in the dining room for the last seven or eight years. I don't feel as though it affects our business at all. We do allow smoking in the lounge. If people have a problem with that, they don't come here."

— Jane McCombs, manager of Kimball's By the Sea, 124 Elm St.

Lack of quorum sidelines water tank site decision

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The special town meeting was dissolved last Thursday due to lack of a quorum, leaving the water articles in limbo.

It takes 100 registered voters to get town meeting underway.

The water articles — which were items of business before town meeting — dealt with where the town's second water tank should be located.

Having ruled out the King Street site next to the water treatment plant because it is too expensive, water commissioners hoped to get direction from the voters. On the table were two possible sites: Bear Hill next to the existing water tank and Scituate Hill.

Bear Hill, which is near the high school and at $1.4 million is slightly less expensive than Scituate Hill, is not popular with abutters who say one large green tank is enough for any neighborhood. Scituate Hill would require the town either buying about two acres of the privately-owned land or taking the land by eminent domain. The area being considered is part of a 62-acre parcel off Route 3A that is currently for sale.

Town Moderator George Marlette said the special town meeting was dissolved rather than adjourned to another night to allow the matters already decided during the previous two sessions to go forward.

It is not clear if selectmen will call another special town meeting which would require the printing and mailing of another warrant or if the water articles can wait until the spring annual town meeting.

Selectmen hope to get some direction from water commissioners who met last night to discuss the issue after the Mariner went to press.

A total of 96 voters were in attendance after a quorum count at 8:30 p.m., Thursday. A motion to dissolve the meeting was seconded and subsequently passed unanimously.

Following the meeting, Marlette explained that trying to recruit four more citizens to reach a quorum might have proved fruitless later on if anyone called for a quorum count. Under town meeting rules, if that had occurred and numbers had dipped under 100, all the discussion to that point would be for naught and the meeting would have to have been adjourned.

Officials upbeat about town meeting government

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

If the voters blew off a little steam at Special Town Meeting last week, don't worry.

Town officials here can handle criticism.

In fact, they kind of relish it.

Moreover, the tone was nothing but upbeat in follow up interviews this week with three familiar faces, selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, Town Manager Mark Haddad and Moderator George Marlette.

All expressed disappointment the meeting had to be dissolved Thursday when the prospect of a third night of critical business failed to turn out a quorum.

And though the next town meeting will probably see some some changes due to this session's sometimes edgy undertone, nonetheless, the three officials expressed skepticism the voters meant to send an overall negative message about the job their local government is doing.

In fact, after two nights of hearing the voters' opinions Monday and Wednesday, all three drew a similar conclusion. Though Sullivan did acknowledge numerous residents had expressed frustration with slow progress made by several town boards, he and the two others doubted this STM could fairly be reviewed as something of a referendum on the local government,

"I guess I thought overall it went well," Sullivan said, although he allowed there were some frustrating moments. "Not being able to complete it was a little frustrating," the Chairman said.

He also criticized the citizen campaign that put the private ways issue in front of voters for a decision because the question is too complicated for the town meeting forum.

"It was not an appropriate time to discuss something of that magnitude," Sullivan said but added he thought it a "little unkind" the citizen petitioner Laura Doherty led people to believe no repair work had been done on her street.

"A lot of work had been done on her road recently," Sullivan said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad also cited a controversial article that he believed did not belong on the warrant, namely the battle of the tree which citizen petitioner William Ross at 16 Church St. wanted chopped down. Haddad said it should have been handled in his office.

"I agree it shouldn't have been on the warrant," Haddad said. "I'm hoping in the future we resolve those at the management level."

Haddad further said he thought the town meeting should be deciding on budgets and bylaws, "not worrying about which streets get plowed."

As for the somewhat disappointing conclusion Thursday, the lack of a quorum pointed out but one more sign of changing times in Cohasset, according to the Town Moderator George Marlette.

"The face of Cohasset has changed," Marlette noted. "There are a lot of young professional people who cannot afford the luxury of time spent on Town Meeting."

But the Moderator also viewed the two nights of debate as a sign the town meeting as an institution is effective. Before the session fizzled out Thursday when fewer than 100 voters turned out to grapple with the water issues, the voters dispatched 23 of the 28 items on the agenda.

Wednesday night, when the meeting re-adjourned, the voters were split on two citizen's petitions. They narrowly turned back an amended question presented by some homeowners who wanted the private way where they reside accepted as a city street. That vote was 79-58 to defeat the question. But the town meeting overwhelmingly approved putting aside money to chop down the tree at 16 Church St.

Of five school spending articles, all but one passed, as the voters defeated a bid to repair windows at the Deer Hill School, pending the outcome of a town-school facilities study. In a surprise, however, the voters approved an additional sum to install air conditioning at the new Osgood School, going for a $250,000 appropriation, rather than the $100,000 for work to make the premises "air conditioning ready" as stated in the original request. With a 60 percent state reimbursement on school construction expenses, the expenditure, which the building committee deemed a "luxury," appeared to be affordable.

Finally, the town meeting took the last article out of order and passed the financial housekeeping questions. In a few cases, the voters dumped unfinished business back in the selectmen's laps, yet Sullivan said things went about the way the board expected, and he was confident matters would be resolved satisfactorily.

New minister takes the pulpit at First Parish church

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

The new minister at the First Parish Unitarian Universalist church has traveled from another country and into a second career to accompany her parishioners along their spiritual journey through life.

The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox, who emigrated from St. Albans, England, in 1968, moved to Cohasset in September to fill the void left in the Unitarian Universalist congregation by her predecessor, the Rev. Edward T. Atkinson. Atkinson led the parish for 26 years until he died suddenly of a heart attack in 1995.

"It was a terrible blow to the community," said Tarbox, 53. "He was very well-loved."

But when she arrived in May for a week of trial ministry at the oldest church in town, she did not find a congregation torn apart by grief. Instead, she discovered an assembly held firmly together by faith.

"The people in the parish took charge of the life of the congregation and the work of the church," she said. "I'm full of admiration for the way the people held their congregation together."

Five years before his death, Atkinson spoke at Tarbox's ordination ceremony from Harvard Divinity School.

"I feel a special privilege to fill his pulpit," she said. "I can't ever walk in his shoes; no one ever could. But at least I can try to follow in his footsteps."

The first woman minister ever to be called to the Unitarian Universalist church and only the 16th minister since the church was founded in 1713, Tarbox has already begun her own path into the lives of the members of the congregation. She views her role in the 200-member parish as a guide and companion as well as a leader.

"I believe we can be and are a congregation of ministers, a ministry among people as well as from a minister to the people," she said. "The ministry to me is about companioning people on their spiritual journey, and if I can do that I think I've really answered that call."

Tarbox will be officially installed as the new minister Nov. 16, although she has served in that capacity since Sept. 1. For the past seven years, she has been the minister at the Unitarian Universalist church in Middleboro.

"The strength of the human spirit is an inspiration to me."
— THE REV. ELIZABETH TARBOX

"I absolutely love my work," Tarbox said. "The strength of the human spirit is an inspiration to me. People continue to rise above the difficulties and struggles life throws at us pretty indiscriminately. But I also get to celebrate the births and the marriages with the crises."

Raised in the Anglican church, Tarbox realized as a mother that she had moved theologically away from the traditional beliefs she was taught as a child.

"There were parts of the faith I couldn't support anymore," she said of her experience upon resuming her religious involvement when she moved to Duxbury .

She began to search for a home in a religion that allowed her the freedom to ponder the "ultimate" questions in life.

"Unitarian Universalism is a faith that insists that its members uncover for themselves their religious beliefs, rather than accepting a doctrine or creed," she explained. "The truth is always being uncovered, just as the scientific truth can also be uncovered."

The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox will be officially installed as the new minister at the First Parish of the Unitarian Universalist church Nov. 16.

One day, Tarbox went to Bridgewater State College and told an advisor there that she had three years to graduate summa cum laude and be accepted at the Harvard Divinity School, which she managed to accomplish.

Tarbox said Unitarian Universalism attracted her because it doesn't emphasize sin and guilt as some religions do.

"The underlying principle is that God's love is available to anyone no matter what and that human beings are born good and able to trust their own conscience," she said. "Part of my ministry here has to do with asking the people here what we can do together."

Unlike some religions in which parishioners recite a creed that begins "We believe," Unitarian Universalists follow a set of principles that reflect a congregation united in its journey into faith.

"We agree to walk together, to talk together, to struggle together, but we don't have to agree," she said.

During her ministry, Tarbox hopes to be looked to as an attentive listener to not only her parishioners but also to members of the community.

"People come to church to get in touch with the deepest part of themselves," she said. "The life issues that confront us are often the ones that could be helped if we have a good listener to tell our stories to."

AFTER YOUR AUTO ACCIDENT

The injury so often associated with auto accidents known as "whiplash" is largely musculoskeletal in nature. As the head and neck are lashed violently backward and forward upon impact, such soft tissue as ligaments, tendons, and muscles endure damage. It should be noted that, while tissue regeneration occurs within six to eight weeks, tissue remodeling could take up to a year and longer. That is to say that the damaged tissue will heal in relatively short order, but some extended chiropractic care may be necessary for the tissue to heal properly. Otherwise, the tissue may become hypersensitive to any pressure or pain. The result is a lowered pain threshold and increased potential for chronic pain.

P.S. It may take several weeks following the accident for the full effects of whiplash injury to be felt.

COHASSET MARINER

Deja Vu all over again for Lady Skippers

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High field hockey team found Nantucket to be a great place to visit, but not too friendly when it comes to playing a game there.

Three years ago, the Cohasset ladies made the high school field hockey playoffs, only to be eliminated by Nantucket in the opening round, 2-0.

The Lady Skippers made the playoffs again this year, and wouldn't you know it, they had to play Nantucket in the opening round and once again were eliminated by Nantucket.

This time Nantucket won 5-2.

The Cohasset ladies dominated the first five minutes of play, getting off eight shots.

In all, Cohasset got off a very respectable 17 shots, with two of them, one by Katie Buckley and the other by Meagan Connelly going in.

"The team worked hard all season long. They proved that over and over. Most of all, the kids showed a lot of class. It was a class team all the way."
HEAD COACH DEBBIE BOSTWICK

The two goals came after Nantucket moved out in front, 3-0.

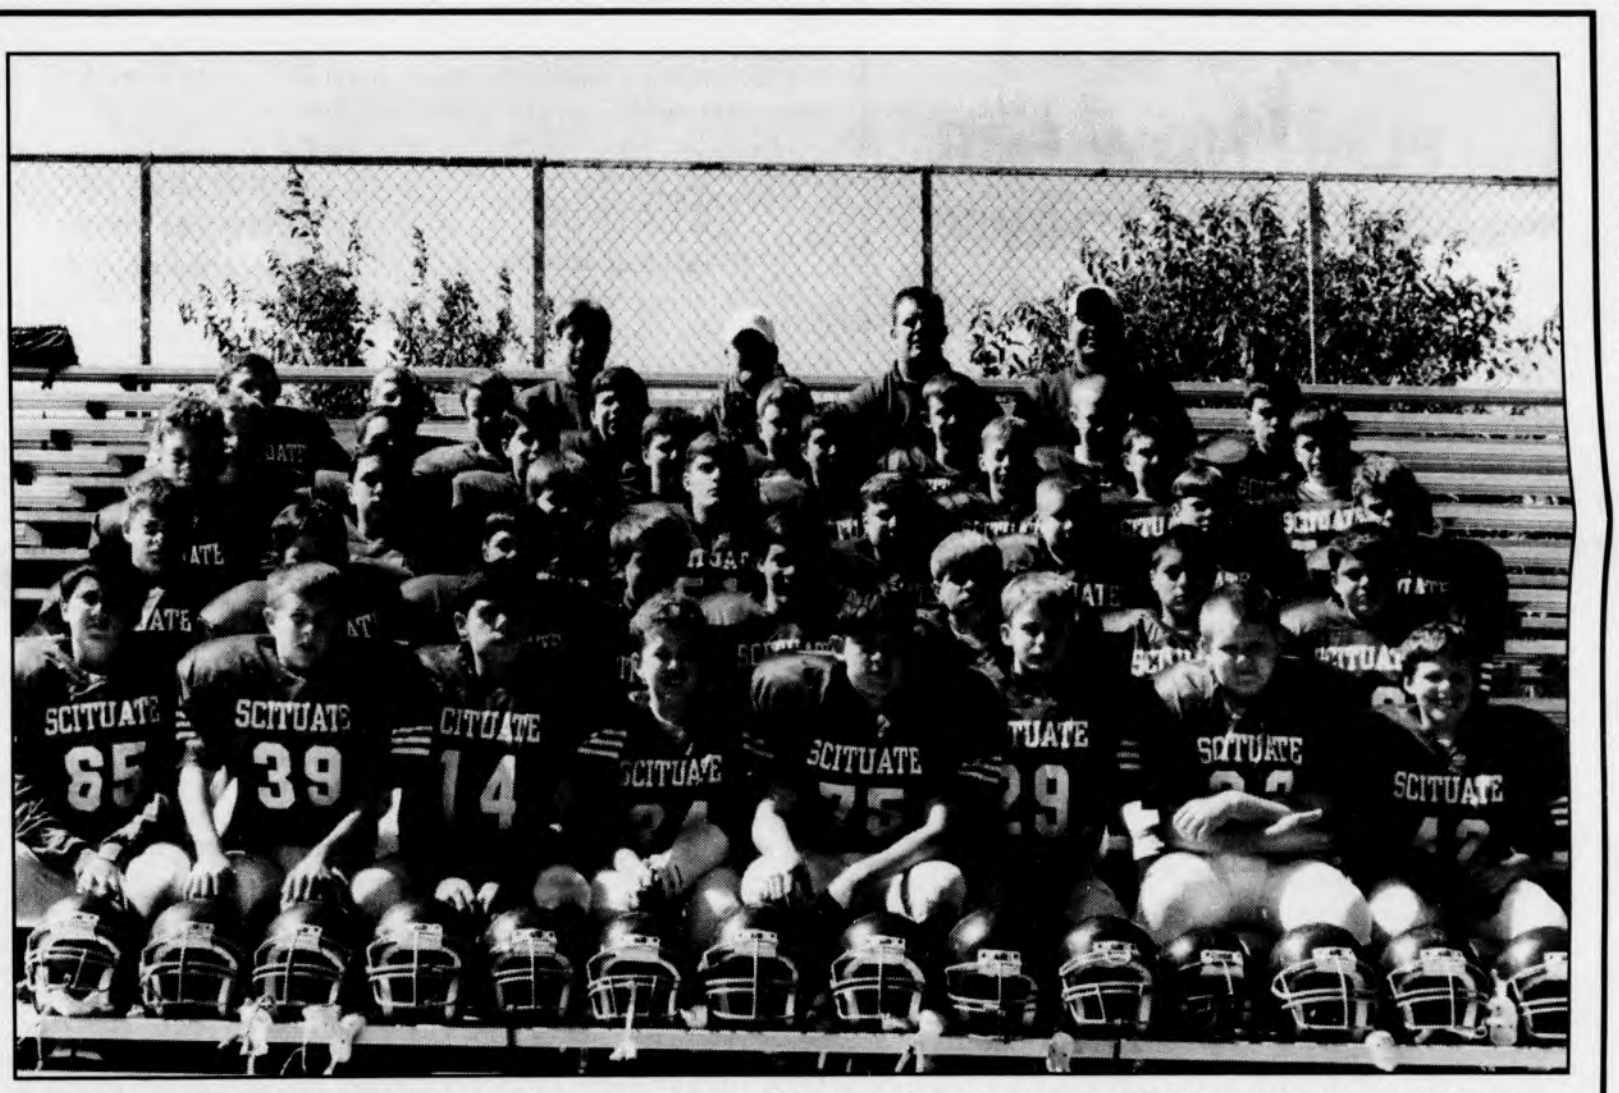
For Cohasset coach Debbie Bostwick, it was the fourth time in her nine years at the helm that Cohasset has made the playoffs. Besides '94 and '97, a Cohasset team also made it in '90 and '92.

This year Debbie's team finished 6-6-4 and tied for third place in the South Shore League. Hull High finished second, while Hanover High led the league.

Cohasset lost two games to Hanover, two to Hull and two to Marshfield, the number three seed in the tourney. Obviously, when the Cohasset ladies lost, they lost to the best.

In the 17 games played this season, Cohasset scored a total of 23 goals, an extremely good scoring figure.

And speaking of great numbers, Cohasset goalie Melissa Rosano, a sophomore, had a tremendous season with a 1.53 average and six shutouts to her credit. Said Bostwick, "She just did a remarkable job for us. She's one of the youngest players on the team and just performed like a veteran. She certainly came through for us."



Scoring the goals for Cohasset were Lauren Dooley with nine, Andi Shaughnessy with six, Connelly with five and Kristen Reynolds with three.

The tourney team that made the trip to Nantucket consisted of Seniors: Captain Alia Afshar, Buckley, Dooley, Sue Gill, Lindy Holloway and Kristen Reynolds; Juniors: Connelly, Katie Donovan and Jill Magner. Sophomores: Rosano, Caitlyn Donovan, Jenn Meehan; Freshmen: Kelly Lordan, Maggie O'Connor, Shaughnessy, Kelly Devine and Melissa Pyform. Also making the trip were backup goalie Kristyn Considine and Kelly Devine.

Two assistant coaches Kate Ridge and Danelle Shaughnessy, along with manager Amanda Gontarz also made the trip.

The team also picked up a number of awards over the course of the year with

The Scituate/Cohasset midget football team will battle for Super Bowl supremacy this Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. on the campus of Silver Lake in Kingston.

Midget squad is Super Bowl bound

The Scituate-Cohasset Sharks Midget youth football team is headed for the Super Bowl.

The game will be played Sunday, Nov. 9 against Bridgewater at the Silver Lake High School athletic field in Kingston. Kickoff will be at approximately 2 p.m.

The Sharks made it to the Super Bowl by defeating Barnstable 38-12 in muddy and rainy conditions at the Hingham High School field last Sunday.

The Midget Sharks had an overall regular season record of 4-3-1 in the Old Colony Youth Football League.

Head coach Danny O'Brien said it was an "up and down season" but that the players never lost confidence even when they lost a couple of close games.

"This is a team with a lot of heart. They just never quit," O'Brien said.

O'Brien credited the offensive line for last Sunday's win against Barnstable. "They are the unsung heroes in that game making great blocks in the muddy trenches," O'Brien said.

Joseph Hughes, president of the Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football League, said he was impressed by all the team members.

"Not every player can start in these games, but you know what? Every player came to practice all year. Every player cheered his teammates on during the win against Barnstable. They are a bunch of real team oriented kids."

The Scituate-Cohasset Pee Wees also made it to the playoffs this year, but suffered a 6-0 defeat against Marshfield last Sunday in a game played at Bridgewater's Legion Field.

Hughes and other members of the Scituate-Cohasset Youth Football League board of directors said they hope that many townspeople will support the Midgets next Sunday in Silver Lake.

"The team is leaving by bus at about noontime from the Scituate High School field, and players' parents and others are welcome to follow the bus into Kingston for support," Hughes said.

Assistant coaches are Chris Conroy, Mike Cronin, Domenic Laudani and Michael McDonald.

Skippers fail to build on winning streak

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Coming off an encouraging 18-6 win over the Charlestown Townies, the Cohasset Skippers were overwhelmed by the Hanover Indians last Friday.

The Indians, who now carry a 5-1-1 record, ran roughshod over the home team, triumphing by a score of 37-0. Cohasset's offense failed to move the chains and were kept far from the endzone.

The Skipper defense stopped Hanover on their first series and the offense gained a first down, but that would be it for Cohasset, as the team played uninspired football the rest of the night.

Hanover was led by running back Mike Kenny, who scored three touchdowns and totaled 123 yards on the ground, and also fired a 42-yard strike on a halfback pass to a diving Chris Magoun.

Kicker Darren King also excelled, splitting the uprights with four extra points and handing the Skippers lousy field position with his booming kickoffs.

There weren't too many bright spots for Cohasset. Backs Justin Golden and Andy Hamilton played well, as did defensive end Jamie Buick.

However, the Skippers will have to raise their level of play in their search for a second win.

The Skippers will travel to South Boston this weekend for a 10 a.m. game Saturday.

Celebrating youth football in Cohasset

Contrary to popular belief Youth Football is alive and well in Cohasset. For the second consecutive year the Scituate/Cohasset Sharks have clinched two berths in the post season playoffs of the Old Colony Youth Football League.

Sunday, Nov. 1, found the sharks competing in play-off games in Hingham and Bridgewater, on the road to the Large Division Super Bowl at Silver Lake High School on Nov. 8.

This year's turnout from Cohasset was the largest yet. Twenty players ranging in age from 8 to 12 gained valuable experience on their way to entering Cohasset's Middle School program.

This year's gridiron warriors were:

Mites — Justin Alexander, David McKenna, Michael Pecca, Justin Hollis.

Pee Wees — D.J. Silvia, Will McCarthy, Jake Previte, Chris McKenna, Steve Davis, Matt Baroudi, Tony Truglia, Crandon Leahy, Matt Casey, Erick Belz, Casey Coleman, Teddy Straughn, Robbie Carpenter, Mark Lewis.

Basketball program needs your help

The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.

Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years.

Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away.

Basketball registration for boys and girls grades 1-8, is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 15, 9 a.m.-11 a.m., Town Hall.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

Recreation basketball registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department/Boosters Basketball registrations will be held for children in grades 1 thru 8 at Town Hall, on Saturday, November 15, from 9a.m. to 11 a.m.

The fee for the program is $30.00. Checks should be made payable to: Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club, (CBBC), and the shirt charge is included in the fee.

Details on the Basketball Program will be available at registration. Games are played on Saturday's, but not during any vacation periods in order to avoid conflicts.

The Recreational Basketball Program is made available via the joint efforts of the Cohasset Basketball Boosters Club and the recreation department, providing youngsters with a teaching and recreational opportunity.

Junior lacrosse program needs additional coaches

Thanks to phenomenal growth in popularity and interest, the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse Club is in need of additional coaches for the Spring 1998 season. No lacrosse experience is necessary.

The reason the team can take coaches without experience is the structure of its league, the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Association, the largest youth league in the country. The league allows communities to have more than one entry, and then allows multiple teams to be scheduled so that they always play in the same place — either home or away together — on the same day.

"We have grown to the point where there is a good chance we will want to field two teams this year," said Chuck Jaffe, who runs the junior program in Cohasset. "If we get volunteers with no experience, I can act as head coach for both teams. If we get someone with lacrosse experience, we each can coach one team. We need a helping hand more than we need an experienced hand."

Jaffe explains that the biggest need is for a coach to assist during practices, when the only way to install an offense or defense is in small groups of players. "The rest of the kids should be doing drills or installing the same offense at the other end of the field, but that's not possible without a second or possibly a third coach," he says.

Last year, the Cohasset junior lacrosse team had 30 players, a high number within the Mass Bay youth teams. This year, thanks to a successful summer camp and increased awareness and interest, Jaffe expects closer to 40 children in grades 5 and 6 to sign up. Without at least one additional coach, Jaffe says he might have no choice but to limit the program to a single team of 30 players signed up on a first-come, first-served basis.

With sign-up set for December and the league needing notification of Cohasset's intention to field a second team by January, the program needs to hear from volunteers now. The Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League also holds a win-

Lady Skippers finish year without a win

The CHS varsity girls soccer team finished the year without a win, but it wasn't for the lack of an effort.

Early season injuries to a number of key players and not being able to finish off their scoring chances for most of the year lead to the demise of the team, which was under the direction of Maureen O'Day Clark.

To their credit, the squad did not lie down and play dead at the end of the year. In fact, one of their better games this season was played against Rockland, who barely escaped Alumni Field with the 2-1 victory they needed to help secure a spot in the MIAA state tourney.

Junior keeper Alex D'Urso was a standout in the game, turning aside a number of glittering Rockland scoring opportunities and helping to keep her team in the game until the very end.

"I'm very proud of this team," said O'Day-Clark. "They worked hard and kept their spirits up all through the season but it seemed we were never able to get any breaks when we needed them. We are a young team and we can't help but learn and grow from this experience."

Almost all of the team will be back for another round next season. Co-captain defenders Ali Kinchla and Hannah Bregin are the only senior members on the team, which this year was dominated by members of the freshman and sophomore class who were given a golden opportunity to learn about how the game is played on the varsity level.

Boys finish just out of tourney contention

Another goal here or a save there could have made a world of difference to the CHS boys soccer team this year. After their win Monday against Medfield, the 6-9-1 team finished only a few points away from qualifying for the state soccer tournament.

Under MIAA rules, to qualify for the state tournament a team needs to have half as many points as it would have had if the team had won each of their games.

The Skippers needed 16 points, but they only got to 13.

Regardless, first-year head coach Jeff Martell said it was an "exciting year" for him, adding that he expected another year of experience for his team could only help them for next year.

"We are only losing six players off the roster to graduation, so that means 12 others are coming back with significant varsity level playing experince," said Martell. "That should leave us with a very strong team."

Two of those leaving the program were named to the South Shore League all-star team last week, co-captains Leigh Atherton and Nate Cotter.

On the varsity roster this year were co-captains Leigh Atherton and Nate Cotter, Derek Bugley, Josh Flannigan, Pat Leahy, Eric Moore, Andrew Ross, Mike Baird, Devin Buick, Mark Equi, Andrew Laney, Ben Littauer, Justin Maitland, Jake Motley, Hunter Pile, Dennis Rooney, Steve Sceery, Kevin DeVito and Eric Shea.

Barcelona's many beautiful sites are best appreciated by foot tour

By Kathryn Ruth Bloom
CNC Correspondent

The Plaza Catalunya — "Placa Catalunya" in Catalan, the language of Barcelona — is an ideal place to begin a walking tour of this unique Mediterranean city, which combines the civility of the North with the brio of the South. Leave your rental car back at the hotel; this is one of the world's great walking cities.

Start at the large underground tourist-information center across the plaza from the subway station. Its multilingual staff has maps, directions and good advice about where to go, what to see and where to eat. You can buy guidebooks with varied and interesting tour routes at the adjoining gift shop, and return later to purchase ceramics, scarves and stunning photographic books as souvenirs.

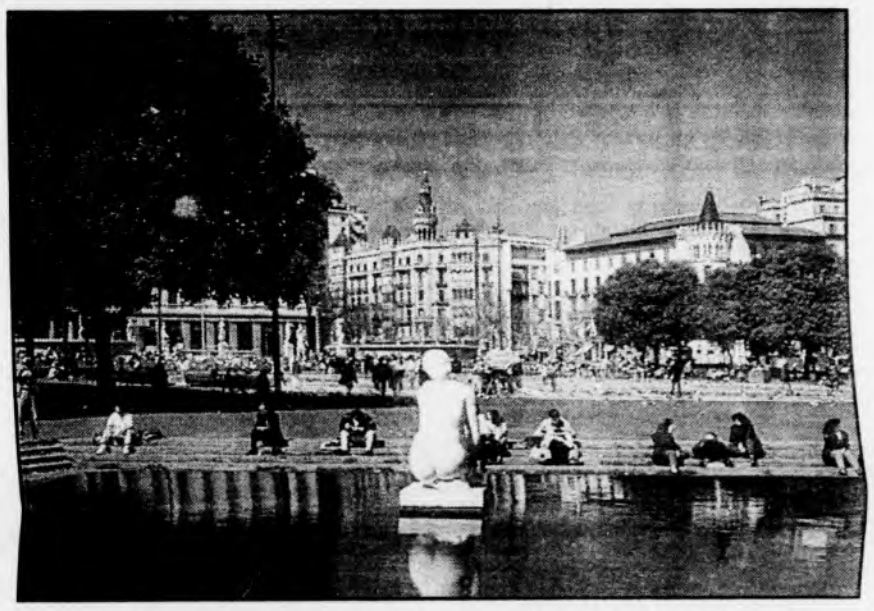
Leave the tourist center, cross the street, and join the promenade along La Rambla, a strip of five connecting boulevards linking the Plaza Catalunya with the harbor. Originally a gully running next to the city's medieval wall, La Rambla began to take on its modern form in the late 18th century. Strolling its broad pedestrian median is an inexpensive and comfortable way to get the feel of the city.

You can stop to buy flowers or a songbird in a cage from a street vendor, watch a mime or musician, or pick up some bread and cheese for lunch at the Boqueria (Butchers) market. This large covered market has been operating since 1840 on the site of a medieval Carmelite convent. Back on La Rambla, be sure to look for the mid-1970s sidewalk mosaic by Joan Miro at the Plaza de Boqueria.

Turn into the Plaza Real, which is on your right as you walk toward the harbor. This arcaded square has a Parisian air and the feel of a funkier Place des Vosges. You leave the square and enter the Barri Gothica (Gothic Quarter), in whose narrow streets and alleys the city began. Here, you are surrounded by architecture dating from the Roman, Romanesque, Renaissance and Gothic periods. But this is a living quarter, not an architectural museum, and you can spend the afternoon shopping happily in its many modern shops and boutiques.

Among the most famous buildings in this area are Gaudi's Guell Palace and Domenech I Montaner's Palau de la Musica Catalana. These architects are among the most famous practitioners of the Moderniste style that extended from the late 1800s into the early years of this century. Each of these palaces served a different kind of nobility — one was the home of the scion of a wealthy mercantile family. The other served as a palace of culture.

The Palau Guell was built between 1886 and 1889 as a town residence for Gaudi's principal patron, Eusebi Guell. Although the building is elaborate in design and luxurious in decoration, it comes across today as somewhat somber and austere. Perhaps this has something to do with its rather cramped "downtown" location, or the fact that Guell lived in it only briefly and it stood empty and lifeless for many years. Today, the Palau Guell is the home of Barcelona's Museum of Performing Arts.



Of particular note is the long circular ramp leading to a basement where Guell's horses were stabled. A few years later, Gaudi would incorporate a similar ramp into a building in Barcelona's modern "Eixample" district. That ramp, however, was conceived for use by automobiles — an indication of how quickly the world was changing.

The other palace, the Palau de la Musical Catalana, pays homage to the nobility of music. Built between 1905 and 1908 for the Orfeo Catala (the Catalan Musical Society), it is an exuberant, somewhat over-the-top building that stresses Gothic elements, the interplay of color and lights, and sculptural detail that celebrates both the revered classical composers and the tradition of Catalan popular song.

Once considered the epitome of Modernisme, the Palau quickly went out of style, and there was talk of demolishing it during the 1920s. Fortunately, this remarkable building was saved and eventually restored. Today, it is an active concert hall and an eccentric jewel in Barcelona's bustling downtown district.

Back on La Rambla, continue to the foot of the boulevard, which fronts on the Mediterranean. Natives will cheerfully admit that the famous statue of Christopher Columbus here in the Portal do la Pau faces vaguely toward North Africa rather than the New World. More important, however is that his backside points firmly toward Madrid, Spain's administrative capital and the aristocratic big city with which bourgeoisie Barcelona has had a testy relationship for centuries. From here, you can stroll along the waterfront to the Olympic Village, built for the 1992 games, or sit for hours in a cafe, sipping coffee and watching the sea.

The days move more slowly in Barcelona than in Boston; 6 p.m. is already evening to us, bordering on night, but still late afternoon in Spain. The restaurants in Barcelona start jumping at 10 p.m. and a siesta back at your hotel, followed by a fruit or pastry from the Boqueria, will give you the energy to hold out until a late dinner.

Barcelona's beautiful Plaza Catalunya is the ideal spot from which to begin your tour.

Tripping the holiday lights fantastic

From P-town to Bolton, Christmas celebrations are in the works

By Lisa Matte
CNC Correspondent

'Tis the season for fun and fa-la-la and there's plenty of both to be found throughout the Greater Boston area and beyond. From Pilgrim marches to Santa Claus parades and tree lighting to carol strolls, communities across the region are set to celebrate this holiday season with a bounty of festive Yuletide activities.

Visitors to Plymouth – America's hometown – take a step back in time to celebrate Thanksgiving with the Pilgrims when they join in a re-enactment of Pilgrim's Progress. On Thanksgiving Day, marchers dressed in period clothing form a processional from Plymouth Rock on the waterfront to the First Parish Church in the town square to celebrate a service commemorating the early settlers' first march to worship.

Thanksgiving takes on new meaning for families who sit down to a holiday feast at Plimoth Plantation following a stroll through the re-created 17th century Pilgrim village. Interpreters bring the 1627 village to life as they go about their daily chores in the New World.

Just a bit west of the Boston area, Thanksgiving visitors to Old Sturbridge Village in Sturbridge experience the holiday as it was celebrated more than 150 years ago when they stroll through period homes and attend the re-creation of an 18th century meetinghouse service. Thanksgiving dinner is served at the village's Bullard Tavern.

Yuletide revelers get a jump-start on the Christmas season in November when a number of communities kick off holiday celebration. Way out in western Massachusetts, the Berkshire Museum hosts a Festival of Trees. From Nov. 15 to Dec. 7, adults and children alike will delight in a festive array of more than 200 holiday trees decorated by area children.

And at the far eastern tip of the state, visitors to Provincetown are in for an illuminating experience on Nov. 26 when town officials flip on the 5,000 holiday lights adorning the 255-foot Pilgrim Monument. Holiday entertainment adds to the festive atmosphere. Back out in Lenox, Santa Claus will be on hand for that town's Nov. 28 tree lighting and carol sing before the jolly old elf hightails it for Cambridge where he is set to be the guest of honor at the Charles Square Tree Lighting featuring the illumination of 10,000 lights draped around a 50-foot Christmas tree.

The state's largest religious display of outdoor Christmas lights illuminates the LaSalette Shrine in Attleboro from Nov. 28 to Dec. 31. The Festival of Lights features daily concerts and displays of more than 160,000 lights.

While the Dec. 6 Christmas Stroll is the highlight of this year's 25th annual Nantucket Christmas celebration, the "faraway island" off the coast of Cape Cod is in high gear for the holiday season from Nov. 28 to Dec. 31 during Nantucket Noel when island residents and visitors alike usher in the season of Noel with a tree lighting ceremony and carol sing. During Stroll weekend, holiday revelers will cast votes in favor of their favorite decorated trees, wreaths and shop windows, peak into homes decorated for the Yuletide season during the annual house tour, enjoy live entertainment on the cobblestone streets of Nantucket town, and join in a community carol sing.

Santa Claus makes his holiday debut in Newburyport on Nov. 30 when he arrives by Coast Guard boat at the waterfront and joins in a horse and buggy parade to the town's Christmas tree in Market Square. Gloucester, Rockport, Essex and Manchester celebrate Christmas on Cape Ann from Nov. 30 to Dec. 25 with all sorts of Yuletide festivities including ice sculptures, open houses, strolling carolers, tree lighting ceremonies and inn tours. And in Concord, the focus is on A Family Christmas at the Concord Museum where a calendar of programs for families and children runs from Nov. 30 to Dec. 31.

Boston jumps on the holiday bandwagon in December when more than 50 trees across Boston Common are illuminated for the Christmas season. Choral groups will stroll through the Common and costumed characters make special appearances.

DRUG FACTS

You can choose not to use alcohol. Many people choose not to drink alcohol at all, for a wide variety of reasons: They want to save their own environment, drugs and alcohol pollute the body, they do not like the taste, they want to maintain full control over their body and their decision-making abilities, they feel sick when they drink, there is a religious or family tradition they want to uphold, they have had a bad experience with alcohol or drugs, and they are fighting an existing or potential problem caused by alcohol or drug use.

Investing: one-hit wonder funds

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

In the universe of equity mutual funds, new funds can sometimes burn very bright and then fade away. It's called the new-fund effect.

There are a host of reasons why the new funds start off so exuberantly: Money managers coddle new funds excessively in the first year and then their attention slacks off to a normal level; the relatively small assets of a new fund can translate successful returns into vast percentage gains; fund managers tend to capitalize on their young portfolios' sensitivity, perhaps by acquiring initial public stock offerings that are widely expected to skyrocket in value.

Many times a new fund with a stellar run cannot sustain its performance. Returns may falter because assets have grown to the point that the effect of any single holding on overall performance is diminished. Some funds lack a deeper rationale behind their creation than just a desire to hop aboard a short-lived trend.

In any case, a new fund's fall from spectacular to average, even below average, can surprise those investors who expect the fireworks to continue.

"If you buy a new fund that's gone up 50 percent, be prepared for maximum risk," which means great losses as well as great gains, says Russel Kinnel, a senior analyst at Morningstar Inc., a mutual fund research firm in Chicago.

So how do you figure out if a neophyte fund is a one-hit wonder or a keeper?

A patient person may suggest waiting and watching a fund's performance for a few years before investing, in order to get a feel for the fund's potential and limitations. But the fact that the market can rise 88 percent in three years and fall 12 percent in three days makes that suggestion unrealistic for investors who want to be part of the action.

Mutual fund consultants suggest that investors focus on new funds created by established fund companies or money managers with proven skill at a particular investment style.

Unlike the so-called "mom and pop" funds, started by individuals often working out of their homes, these outgrowths have a support structure and a research staff behind them.

"I would look to new funds coming out of large established family groups that have demonstrated portfolio management skills," says Burton Greenwald of B.J. Greenwald Associates, a Philadelphia-based mutual fund consulting firm.

Kinnel concurs. "If you are buying a new fund, you are gambling on the unknown. But if you have a fund company that you trust or a manager you know, it removes a lot of the uncertainty," he says.

For example, when Oakmark introduced its Oakmark Select Fund last November, Kinnel said his colleagues at Morningstar sat up and took notice because the company's equity funds have reaped impressive returns in the past. Their hunch about the new fund was not wrong: It returned 43 percent in the first nine months of this year.

Conversely, it might have been wise to avoid the Dreyfus Aggressive Growth Fund, started in the fall of 1995, since Kinnel says "Dreyfus' domestic (equity) funds have not been great in the past." Although the fund returned a whopping 99 percent between November 1995 and April 1996, it then proceeded to fall, finishing 1996 with a return of 21 percent for the year. The fund is down 4 percent so far this year.

To be fair, funds that invest in small-cap and even smaller micro-cap stocks, like the Dreyfus Aggressive Growth Fund, tend to be the most volatile.

Kinnel says that he favors fund families such as T. Rowe Price, Fidelity, Vanguard, Select American, as well as funds run by Michael Price at Franklin, because of their research and management skills.

Michael Price is one of the money managers who have earned a devoted following among investors. He has been managing mutual funds for more than 20 years and his funds have consistently landed in the top 20 percent of their peer groups.

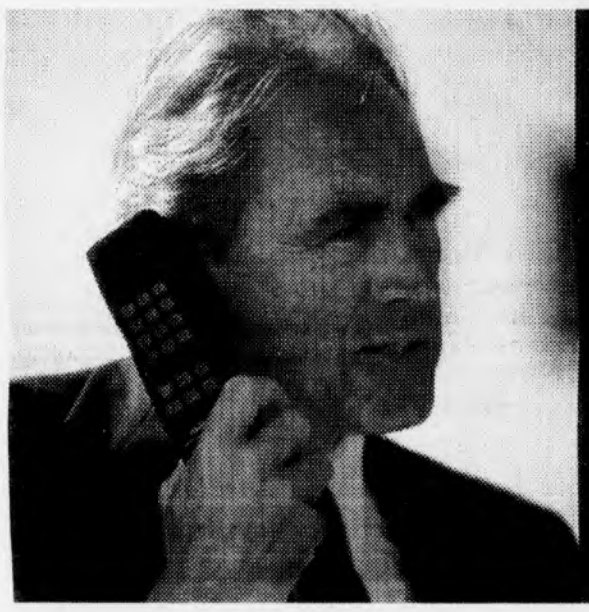
Price's investing style does not vary much from fund to fund. He searches out companies he believes are undervalued and then works to catalyze transactions that will realize jumps in value.

It makes sense, therefore, that the two funds he created in the last four years have done well. The Franklin Mutual Discovery Fund, created in 1993, has delivered three-year returns that have earned it a ranking among the top five of its category (the fund invests in small, undervalued companies around the world). And Franklin Mutual European, which made its debut in July 1996, has returned 34 percent in its first year.

Just because you recognize a company's or manager's name, however, does not mean their new fund will be a sure thing. Beware of funds that deviate from the proven strengths of the money manager or parent company. Such would be the case if Price, a value investor, decided to start a growth fund.

Smith Barney, for instance, known for its conservative investment style, has made a few attempts at creating portfolios with aggressive investing styles—much to investors', as well as its own, chagrin.

Investors seem to have insatiable appetites for new funds, evidenced by the fact that mutual funds are launched at an average of more than one a day, according to the Investment Company Institute in Washington, D.C. The important thing is to make sure you don't become an investor



The scoop on scoops

Investors often want to buy or sell a stock because of the latest headlines. Take the recent brouhaha over Microsoft. The Justice Department released its hounds last week, alleging that Microsoft violated a 1995 agreement. Reno & Co. argue that the software giant has coerced PC manufacturers into taking the Internet Explorer browser as a condition of getting the Windows operating system. This news was viewed as positive for competitor Netscape, whose stock jumped appreciably.

Why were investors buying Netscape based on this news? The actual impact of these legal wranglings is uncertain. The Justice Department is focusing on copies of Internet Explorer that come pre-installed on PCs. This is not Microsoft's only distribution channel. More than a million people downloaded Internet Explorer 4.0 on the first day it was available. Changing Microsoft's agreements with the PC makers will not erase its market share. Even if Microsoft fails to comply with the Justice Department's requirements, the worst that happens is a $1 million per day fine. As of today, Microsoft could last 26 years before running out of cash. Although news like this sounds important, its long-term impact is often questionable. Buying and selling Microsoft or Netscape based on this news alone is not.

FundsNetwork offers access to 575 4-star and 253 5-star rated funds out of 2,914 funds as of 9/30/97. Morningstar equity fund universe includes domestic stock funds (which included, but were not limited to, growth and income, and equity income objectives), international stock funds, and specialty funds. Morningstar bond fund universe includes both taxable and non-taxable bond funds. Morningstar proprietary ratings reflect historical risk-adjusted performance as of 9/30/97. The ratings are subject to change every month. Morningstar ratings are calculated from a fund's 3-, 5- and 10-year average annual returns in excess of 90-day Treasury, including loads, if appropriate, and a risk factor that reflects performance below the 90-day Treasury. Of all funds in each category, 10% rate 5-stars from Morningstar, 22.5% rate 4-stars, and 35% rate 3-stars. [2]All fees described in the funds' prospectuses still apply. Fidelity Brokerage Services, Inc. or its brokerage affiliates may be remunerated for providing certain recordkeeping and shareholder services to the fund families. Pumpkin judging at the Silver Spoon

"Cohassetopoly" ready for the holidays

Next month, the South Shore Community Center will be ready to sell the game, "Cohassetopoly." For $20 you will have the opportunity to own all the real estate and businesses you want in Cohasset. Proceeds will benefit the scholarship fund of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. The Junior Gardeners of this club worked all summer preparing this game. Quantities are limited. Call 383-0088 for more information.

Watercolors by JoAnne Chittick

An exhibit of watercolors by Cohasset's JoAnne Chittick will be on display at the Scituate Arts Association Gallery through the month of November.

The artist is known for her colorful watercolor renditions of landscapes as well as seascapes, but more often her lively brush has captured local scenes that feature the flavor of New Englands landmarks and homes. JoAnne is an exhibiting member of several South Shore art associations and the Cape Cod and Cambridge associations as well. She has won many awards at these locations and, in addition, the New England Juried Show.

Located at 131 Front St., Scituate Harbor, Mass., the gallery hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sunday, 1 to 5 p.m.; and closed Monday. Information can be obtained by calling the gallery at (781) 545-6150.

Mark calendar for Village Fair

A 55 year tradition comes to Cohasset Saturday, Dec. 6, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. for the Cohasset Village Fair.

Elizabeth Tarbox, assisted by director of religious education, Jacqueline Clark, will be held on Tuesday evenings, Nov. 11, 18 and 25 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Parish House at 23 N. Main St.

The program is open to participants from the parish and from the wider community. To register and order a copy of the book ($10) please call the parish office at 383-1100 during office hours, 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

ASP can help you celebrate

The holiday season is fast upon us. The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project can help lighten your load!

For Thanksgiving, they're once again selling pies (pecan, apple and pumpkin) and breads (cranberry and pumpkin). Watch the mail for a town-wide mailing which will include order forms.

METCO holiday wreath sale

The Cohasset METCO committee is selling balsam holiday wreaths as a fund-raiser this year. The wreaths are double-faced and are standard door size (22"). The wreaths will be supplied by growers who furnish fashionable nurseries, yet will cost only $10 each.

The holiday wreaths will be pre-ordered. The order deadline is Monday, Nov. 24. All order forms and checks should be returned to the secretaries of Osgood and Deer Hill Schools or the METCO coordinator Yvonne Jones at Cohasset High School. The wreaths will be available for pick-up at the Cohasset High School gym on Saturday, Dec. 6, (the first day of recreation basketball) from noon to 4 p.m. Decorative handmade bows will be available for the customer's convenience on that day as well.

Teens' hard liquor is a concern

Although Halloween was without major incident, police did charge three teenagers with minors transporting alcohol. The arrest was routine, Police Chief Brian Noonan said, except that it is disturbing to find an increasing number of youths with hard liquor.

Police confiscated two 1.75 liter bottles of Capt. Morgan rum and a two-liter bottle of Coca-cola, Noonan said.

"The amount of alcohol found is alarming," he said. "It seems like kids are drinking just to get drunk."

The rum is 70 proof as opposed to beer which is 4-6 percent alcohol and wine which is 13-16 percent alcohol.

Arrested were minors Timothy Herzog, 17, of 37 Church St. and Richard B. Hubbell, 17, of 4 Pine Ridge Road. Police would not release the name of the girl because she is under 17.

Halloween night was peaceful

Both police and selectmen commented this week that Halloween night was without any major incidents.

"There was the least amount of eggs, shaving cream and general mischief (in quite some time)," Selectman Nan Roth said.

"All in all, it was a success. Halloween was safe and quiet," Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

He said the schools help to get the word out to the kids and the dance at Deer Hill sponsored by the Teen Center helped.

Police put extra patrols on last Friday night as a precaution, Jackson said.

Norfolk County proposes landbank for towns, like Cohasset

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Money for open space acquisition is usually in short supply when town meeting convenes each year. First the school department gets its cut, followed by municipal services, public safety and public health. What is usually leftover is a small amount of money and a lot of worthy projects competing for the same dollars.

Norfolk County believes it has found a way to raise money for open space acquisition without imposing new taxes. A joint taxation committee of the state legislature is examining the proposal. And the board of selectmen and other town officials support it.

Many towns in the state are struggling with ways to preserve open space. Residents in communities throughout the state are alarmed at the rate of development and the loss of forests, fields and pristine land.

But land acquisition is expensive. Eminent domain takings and purchases of large pieces of virgin land can cost millions of dollars.

The county proposal is asking the state legislature to permanently reallocate the state's deeds excise fee annually to communities for open space purchases.

In a letter to the Norfolk County Advisory Board, selectmen unanimously supported the plan.

"The proposal to use existing county receipts generated from the transfer of land is innovative and appropriate, and the proposed distribution of 90 percent of the state's share of these funds to the cities and towns that generate the land tax revenue is in the board's review, extremely appropriate and fair," the wrote.

Conservation commission member Susan Cope also liked the proposal.

"I support open space and landbanks, and this sounds like a good, appropriate plan," Cope said. "However we can fund open space is important because the longer we wait the higher the price gets."

Cope said Cohasset is fortunate because it has so many wide-open areas like Wompatuck State Park and Whitney and Thayer woods. Approximately one-third of Cohasset is open space.

New commercial and residential development produces new tax revenue, but that is frequently offset by the accompanying strain on schools, public works and other services.

Many communities have proposed funding landbanks through the imposition of a new one or two percent tax on all real estate transactions.

But Realtors and developers have opposed those efforts. Acting Governor Paul Cellucci has sided with landbank opponents, vowing to veto a Barnstable County landbank plan that has already been approved by the legislature.

The state does offer a pro[illegible] of matching funds for oper[illegible] purchases, but towns must [illegible] up with the money first and [illegible] for a state reimbursement.

There also is a limit on how much each town can receive in matching funds.

Norfolk County Advisory Board Coordinator John Dacey said the proposal would divert existing tax money from the state to towns.

Currently, the state imposes a 2.28 percent per $1,000 deeds excise tax on all real estate transactions. The excise is paid to the Registry of Deeds and transferred to the state general fund.

The state collected more than $45 million in deeds excise fees in the last fiscal year, $5.5 million from Norfolk County.

Norfolk County also imposes an additional 2.28 percent per $1,000 deeds excise on real estate transfers. The county excise pays for the county prison system and a few other programs.

The county proposal is asking the state legislature to permanently reallocate the state's deeds excise fee annually to communities for open space purchases.

Each community would receive back 90 percent of the money collected annually as deeds excise taxes on real estate sales within its borders. The remaining 10 percent would support first-time home buyers programs.

If the law had been enacted in the current fiscal year, Cohasset would have received as much as $200,000, which is the amount the state projects it will collect in deeds excise fees from real estate transactions in town.

Dacey said the plan would give towns back an amount at least equal to their annual county taxes. Cohasset paid $67,500 in county taxes in the last fiscal year.

"On the plus-side, our proposal would apply to all communities across the state without creating a new tax," Dacey said. "The minus-side is that we have to convince the state legislature to give up this source of funding permanently."

Dacey said the timing is good because lawmakers estimate the state will close out the current fiscal year with a $700 million to $800 million surplus.

The county's proposal is in line behind two other pieces of open space legislation. The first bill would create a new one percent tax on all real estate transactions in Barnstable County. Although Cellucci said he will veto the plan, Dacey said there are enough votes in the legislature to override a veto.

The second bill is the Community Preservation Act, which would impose a new one to two percent tax on all real estate transactions in the state.

"The only hope our proposal has is if the Community Preservation Act fails," Dacey said. "Our proposal would amount to only about one-quarter percent. It isn't big bucks, but it could cover annual interest payments on debt service."

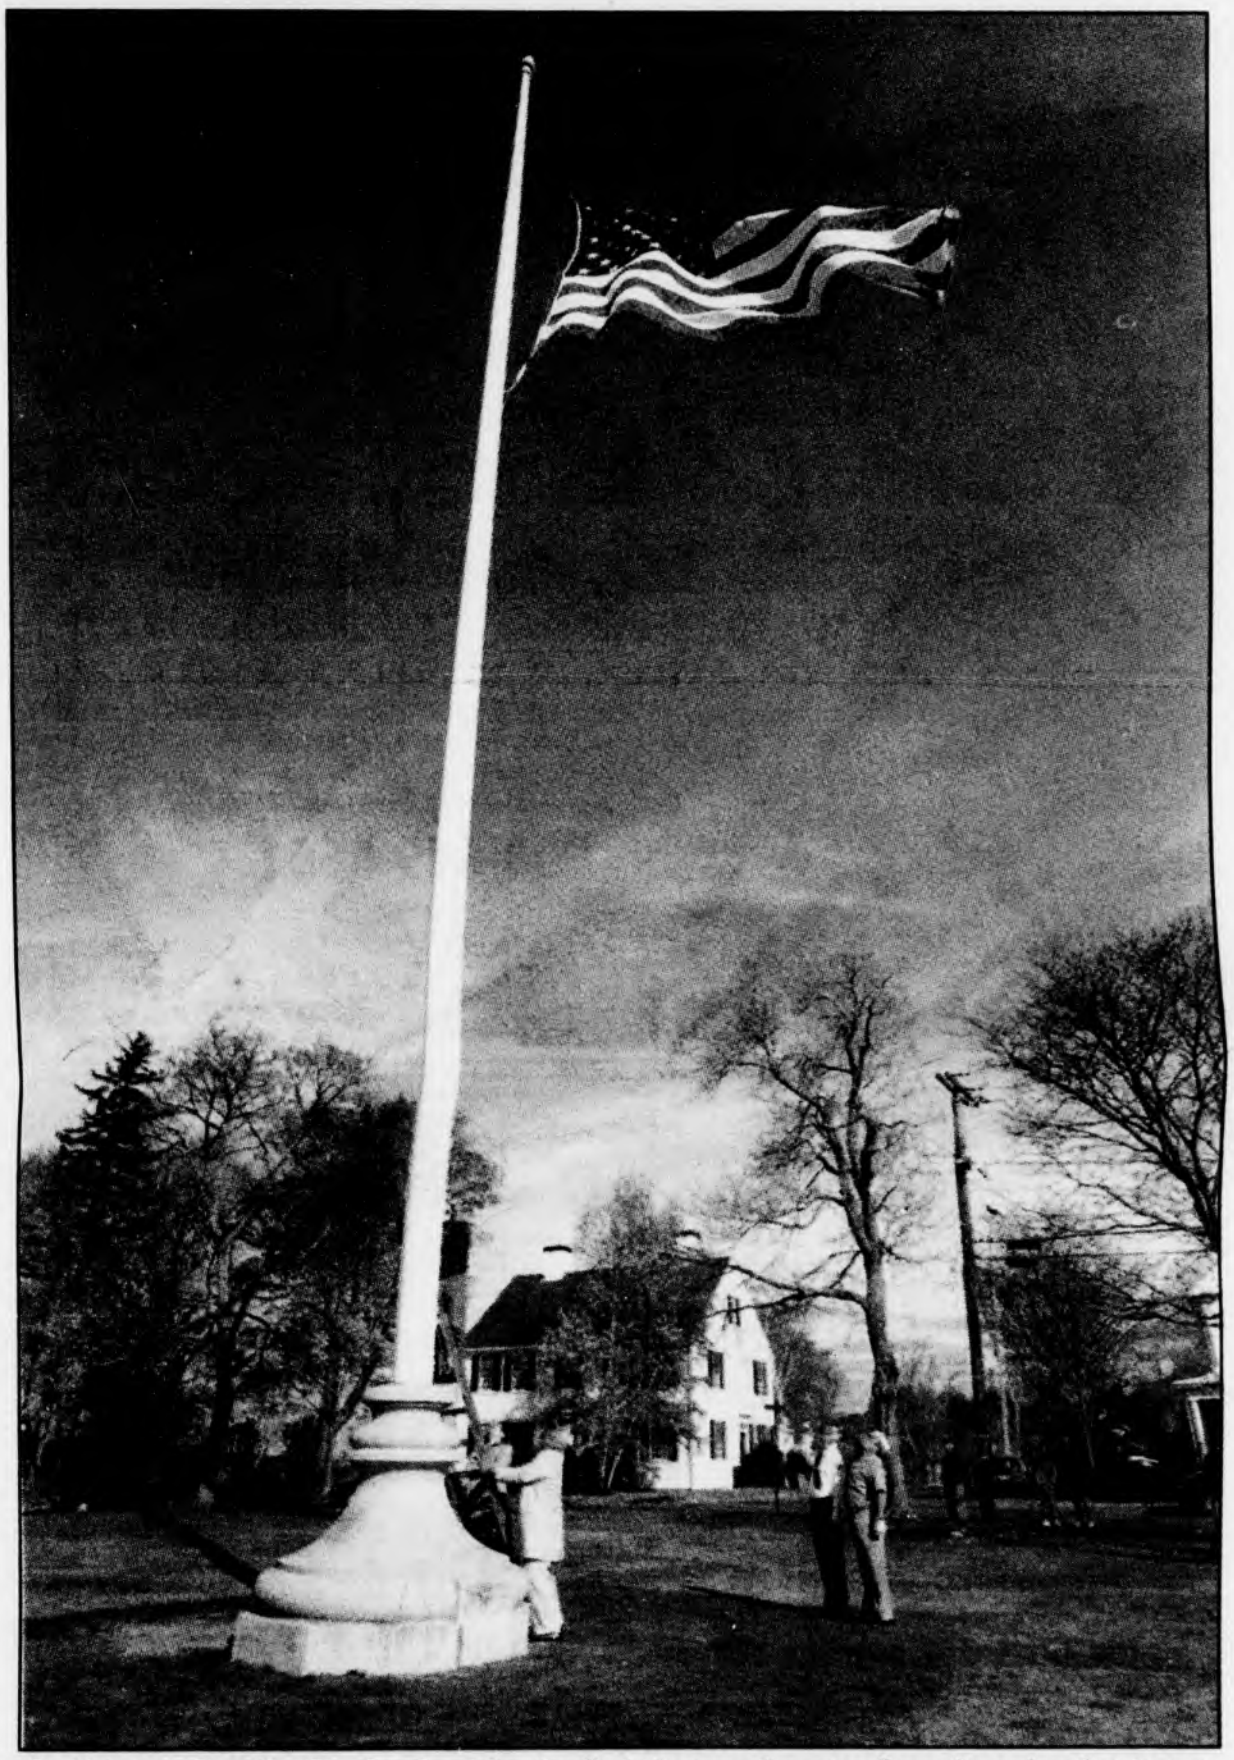
Cable-TV hearings are on hold while MediaOne upgrades

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT



MediaOne's 15-year license to provide cable service to Cohasset expires in Feb., 1999. The renewal actually begins three years prior to the expiration of the license, so Cohasset is already in the beginning of the process.

But the cable TV committee is taking a wait-and-see approach as MediaOne upgrades its equipment and services as part of its "Social Contract" with the federal government.

Robert Hillman, chairman of the cable TV committee, said it would be imprudent to begin formal negotiations when MediaOne is in the middle of a major upgrade that is supposed to deliver better service at no additional cost.

While the upgrade will provide better service and infrastructure at no cost to cable subscribers, additional channels and Internet service may cost subscribers more money.

Accord reached over street opening fees

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

When Boston Gas beat the City of Newton out of four assorted street inspection charges this summer, towns like Cohasset effectively became unnamed losers in the lawsuit.

Boston Gas had been paying Cohasset $50 in the summer and $100 in the winter every time the company made a cut in the street to lay a utility line or make repairs.

No more.

Under a settlement with Cohasset, Town Manager Mark Haddad said, Boston Gas will pay nothing for street permits for the next four years.

Moreover, when charges resume, they will be dropped to $25, the top price the high court would allow for a clerk's services preparing the permit and the paperwork.

Nonetheless, Haddad said the town would still be protected if Boston Gas crews left the street in an unsatisfactory condition because the company would still be required to post a bond to cover the cost of street damage.

"They are two separate issues," Haddad said about the bond and the fees.

Meantime, since Boston Gas already paid Cohasset about $12,000 "under protest" over the past five years, specifically for the street opening and work inspection charges which the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial

SAFE accuses private landfill of dumping violations

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Representatives of Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), an anti-landfill group determined to prevent the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill from expanding, has accused the company of illegally dumping refuse in an unpermitted area.

Members of SAFE say CHL has been dumping waste into an unpermitted area since 1989. The anti-landfill group contends that the alleged illegal land-filling violates town bylaws and state solid waste laws.

"The evidence shows that CHL has blatantly flaunted the law by dumping wastes into Area IV-B of their property, which is outside of the area covered by their special permit from the zoning board of appeals and their site assignment from the board of health," said John K. McNabb Jr., of SAFE.

CHL owner Paul Barry and his attorney, Anton Moehrke, could not be reached for comment.

McNabb said SAFE has filed complaints with the board of health, the state Department of Environmental Protection, the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and building inspector Robert Egan.

McNabb said he discovered the illegal land-filling after consulting maps from 1987 and 1997 detailing the landfill's boundaries. McNabb said the maps showed that refuse was being placed well beyond the legal limits of the landfill.

The 1987 map showed the exact boundaries of Area IV. In 1987, CHL applied to the zoning board for a special permit to accept household refuse and to allow land-filling in a previously unpermitted area, referred to as Area IV-B.

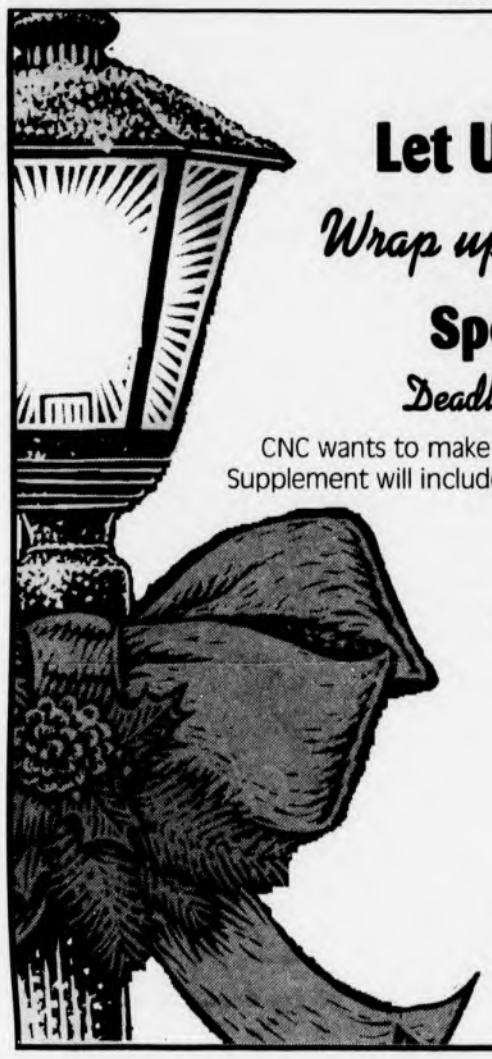
Sunday liquor openings on agenda

Selectmen will discuss allowing local liquor stores to remain open on Sundays during the holiday season at 7:50 p.m., Monday, Nov. 17. For more information, please call Town Manager Mark Haddad, 383-9900.

Regional recycling cooperative launched

Monday selectmen endorsed having the town become part of the South Shore Recycling Cooperative, a group of 14 towns seeking mutually beneficial ways to deal with solid waste.

John McNabb who sits on the South Shore Refuse Disposal Planning Board — the group that came up with the plan for the new recycling cooperative — said by joining the group the town does not relinquish its rights to say "no thanks." The refuse planning board was created to study forming a solid waste district which would have been an independent authority. The group ruled that out in favor of the cooperative, McNabb said.



"The cooperative will have the authority to seek joint efforts on behalf of the towns but it will be up to the towns to accept or reject it," McNabb explained.

The matter will now go before the spring annual town meeting for final approval, he said.

The new cooperative is an outgrowth of the South Shore Coalition of which Cohasset is a member.

Committee appointments made

Town Moderator George I Marlette has reappointed Paul M. Donovan, 11 Bancroft Rd., to the government structure committee and Gordon Hislop, 374 Atlantic Ave., to the design review board.

High-speed catamarans coming to Hingham

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

An artist's rendering of a catamaran like the ones that Harbor Cruises is purchasing for its Hingham commuter boat service.

How about a commuter boat trip from Hingham to Boston in nearly half the time?

That will be possible at Hewitt's Cove next summer when Harbor Cruises adds catamarans to its fleet as planned.

An official with Harbor Cruises confirmed Wednesday that the company has purchased two catamarans to use for its Hingham service.

The high speed vessels can make the one-way trip in 20 minutes as compared with 35-to-40 minutes a trip on one of the regular boats.

They will also contribute less to erosion because the vessels with two parallel hulls displace less water, Jane Daly, a partner with Harbor Cruises said. (See related story).

Harbor Cruises plans to add to its fleet two, 121-foot, aluminum water-jet catamarans, which have a passenger capacity of 350. These boats can reach a speed of 33 knots fully loaded and will be equipped with interior heating, air conditioning, airline-style seats, tables and lounge areas, and cocktail and food service bars on both decks.

Gladding-Hearn Shipbuilders of Somerset is building the boats, which produce only a minimal wake and will begin carrying commuters next summer, Daly said.

"I think the addition of the catamarans really illustrates the commitment we've made to provide South Shore commuters with the most up to date, comfortable and efficient way to get into town.

"We're excited and hopeful this will lead to an increase in overall ridership from the South Shore," she said.

Plans are for the catamarans to replace some of the ships that Harbor Cruises currently uses for its Hingham service, although expanding the service is not out of the question, Daly said.

The new boats will be the latest addition to Harbor Cruises fleet that includes the John J. Doherty, a $1.5 million, 144-foot long commuter boat with a passenger capacity of 350, the company added in September. The figure for the Doherty includes the purchase price and several hundred thousand dollars invested in air conditioning, top-of-the-line seating, carpeting, wood paneling and polished brass columns.

The new boats, plus the upgrades to existing vessels represent an investment of more than $10 million for the company.

At the time, James O'Leary, a partner with Harbor Cruises, said the purchase of the Doherty was "just the first step in the company's long-range plan to serve passengers on its Hingham-Boston commuter boat service." Harbor Cruises came on board in Hingham in July after the MBTA awarded it a five-year contract to operate the subsidized service. The high bidder, Boston Harbor Commuter Service, which had the previous contract, subsequently joined forces with Massachusetts Bay Lines, a private carrier.

The competition has resulted in the companies attracting customers through amenities and a speedy ride.

Shoreline suffers in wake of commuter boat traffic

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Monica Reiley of Beach Road Hingham has nothing against commuter boats.

She thinks they are about the best way to get to Boston.

But what she doesn't like is what the surge of boats is doing to the shoreline along her property and others in her neighborhood.

"I love commuter boats," Reiley said. "But I'd like see a little neighborly action going on here."

Reiley says erosion is nothing new but the increased competition in commuter boat service over the past six months has exacerbated the situation. She says the boats are literally "drag racing" out of Hingham to get to Boston.

She says big clumps of firmly rooted sea grass at the shoreline are being torn out by the sheer force of the water. Fences have been knocked down, moorings have been ripped out and waves have come crashing over sea walls.

And she worries with the proposed development of the shipyard, the damage will only get worse.

She has seen as many as three commuter boats at a time in the channel that runs between her side of the shore and Webb Park in Weymouth.

"There's a lot of water being displaced," she said. "This is not just little waves happening. We've never gotten this kind of erosion even in big storms."

Owners of the two competing commuter boat companies - Harbor Cruises and the Hingham Commuterboat - are both aware of the problem and say they've instructed their boat captains not to speed.

William Spence, owner of the Hingham Commuterboat, says the problem is nothing new.

"The Coast Guard got involved several years ago," he said. Spence explained that speeding is directly related to erosion because it causes more wake, which are the rolls of water left by a moving ship.

> "This is not just little waves happening. We've never gotten this kind of erosion even in big storms."
> — MONICA REILEY, BEACH ROAD IN HINGHAM.

"The faster they go, the bigger the wake," he said. "I hope none of my people are causing it. I'm conscious of it and will try to keep a handle on it."

Jane Daly, a partner in Harbor Cruises, said their crews have strict instructions to "err on the side of caution."

Daly said the company's catamarans due to come on line next summer should help alleviate the problem (see related story).

"The will create a minimal wake which underscores our commitment to be a good neighbor," she said.

Reiley has launched a letter-writing campaign to state and local agencies and has copied her correspondence to local newspapers to bring attention to the matter.

She claims time schedules have taken precedence over the environment.

"There are too many commuter boats," she wrote to the state Environmental Police. "The waterway is not large enough to accommodate such water displacement without adverse affects. Due to the lack of dock space and increase of boats you can have one boat waiting off Grape Island as another boat travels to Boston and another comes into Hingham."

But there are no signs that commuter boat traffic will abate.

With traffic snarls on the expressway and more boats to chose from, many are finding the commuter boat attractive.

The numbers taking commuter boats in and out of Hingham have never been better, according to Spence.

"Numbers are up across the board," he said.

Officials at Harbor Cruises, which won the MBTA contract to provide subsidized service in June, say their numbers are steadily increasing.

The company is averaging about 1,800 riders a day, up from about 1,400 in June.

"There's been a steady increase as people become more accustomed to the service and our crews and captains," said James O'Leary, a partner in Harbor Cruises.

O'Leary said he agrees with Spence that some of the increase is due to brand-new riders.

"With the traffic in and out of the city, people are recognizing this is a great way to commute."

However, O'Leary said he shares Reiley's worries about the number of boats operating out of a congested area. He said Harbor Cruises is concerned that the addition of boats by Hingham Commuterboat overburdens the facility in both Hingham and Boston and creates an inequity with its contract with the MBTA.

(Boston Harbor Commuter Service, which lost the MBTA contract, joined forces with Massachusetts bay Lines, a private service, last summer and launched the Hingham Commuterboat, which competes directly with the T subsidized service).

In the meantime, Reiley plans to continue her campaign to make the powers that be force the boats to adhere to the rules of the waterways and slow down.

She said the Coast Guard recommended making a video depicting the movement and force of the water.

"I'm going to keep pursuing this," she said. "I'm going to pay attention while we still have land to pay attention to."

COHASSET'S WEEK

New quotes to raze old fire station

The town will ask for new quotes to raze the old North Cohasset Fire Station. The first company to bid for the job — Rosano & Davis — informally protested this week because the amount of its first quote $8,500 was made public at a recent selectmen's meeting before other quotes had been submitted. Subsequent quotes came in at $8,400 and $8,200, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. By law the town has to award the job to the lowest qualified bidder.

Peter Davis of Rosano & Davis said it was unfair that two more bids were submitted after the $8,500 figure was announced during the televised selectmen's meeting.

Haddad explained that under the Uniform Procurement Act, for projects from $1,000 to $10,000, the town needs only to solicit quotes not sealed bids.

After discovering what happened, Rosano & Davis tried to submit another quote at $7,500 but that was too late because it was after the requisite number of three quotes had been turned in.

Haddad told Davis that although it's unfair, there is not formal way to protest except by appealing to selectmen.

That strategy worked. Because after some discussion, selectmen decided to ask Haddad to throw out all the quotes and solicit new ones.

That seemed to satisfy Davis who said the town would no doubt get a lower price for the job as a result.

Accord reached over street opening fees

Court this August deemed illegal, Haddad said a settlement was a prudent move.

"We would lose, based on that other case," Haddad said, if the utility tried to recover the $12,000 which it has opted not to do now.

According to counsel for Boston Gas James J. Tobin, the company was "paying under protest" and ultimately decided to go after the communities, due to "the acceleration of costs" associated with street openings.

After an appeal to the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts Aug. 14 went in the company's favor, Boston Gas started making the rounds to numerous cities and towns to ask for settlements.

But now, a lobby for state municipal governments may try to get legislative help for the communities because according to Gayle A. Smalley, the associate city solicitor in Newton, "as a matter of judicial review, there is no place further to take it." Also, though calls placed to the lobby group, the Massachusetts Municipal Association, and their point man David Baier were not returned this week, according to Smalley, preliminary discusions have gotten underway to "change the state statute that governs the presence of utilities in the public way."

Newton started charging the utility company for street openings after an ordinance was adopted in 1991, but the court's decision "ruled the City of Newton's fees for street opening permits were invalid with one exception of a $25 application fee which the court let stand," Smalley said.

The Newton city solicitor also said the other charges, which the court judged to be inconsistent with state statutes, were two street opening fees based on the size of the excavation, with $150 set for holes of 100 square feet or less and $50 added for every additional 100 square feet. Finally, the city also charged $50 extra to cut small inspection holes, such as corings and shutoff holes.

Smalley said she hoped to settle the city's costs for less than the $274,000 in the dispute with Boston Gas. Smalley said although the city won the case in Superior Court, the high court overturned the decision on an appeal.

The zoning board denied the request because of potential health hazards and possible damage to the water resources district.

The 1997 map, which CHL submitted as part of its request for a vertical expansion, showed the company was placing fill into Area IV-B, according to McNabb.

McNabb claims CHL even submitted a map at one point that showed area IV of the landfill encompassing Area IV-B.

"Another map they submitted in their request to expand Area V showed Area IV of the landfill extending 50 feet into Area IV-B," McNabb said. "They just changed the lines on their own maps. Paul Barry may think they're allowed to do that, but they're not."

In some case, the alleged illegal fill extends as much as 70-feet beyond the boundary of Area IV of the landfill, according to McNabb.

McNabb said the distance between the allegedly illegal refuse and the Massachusetts Highway Department property confirms that the violation exists. McNabb said he visually inspected the illegally filled area himself to confirm what he saw on the maps.

According to McNabb, the distance between the edge of the landfill and the Mass. Highway property should have been 200 feet plus 20 feet for the road. But a spot check showed a distance of only 173-feet, McNabb said.

"This is clearly a deliberate and flagrant violation of zoning bylaws," McNabb said. "They had to have put that fill there on purpose. It looks like they completely ignored the line."

McNabb said the next step is to get regulatory agencies involved and to survey the area to confirm the violation.

The latest accusation against CHL comes on the heels of a Norfolk Superior Court hearing Nov. 11 on the company's appeal of a board of health decision in 1996 denying its application to expand the landfill.

In a previous hearing, the court denied CHL's claims that the town had violated its civil rights. The court also prevented CHL from calling new witnesses for testimony after the case had concluded.

CHL and the town will return to court on Nov. 21 to deliver 1/2-hour depositions for and against the health board's decision to deny the expansion.

CHL also has a case pending in the state land court challenging the town's water resources protection district. Lawyers for CHL say the district's lines were arbitrarily drawn to prevent the landfill from expanding

The Rev. Tarbox installed Sunday

The Rev. Elizabeth Irene Tarbox, the first woman to be called as settled Minister of the First Parish in Cohasset, Unitarian Universalist, will be formally installed Sunday, Nov. 16, at 4 p.m. in the First Parish Meeting House on Cohasset Common. She will be the 16th settled minister since the founding of the Parish in 1713 .

English-born but now an American citizen, Tarbox is a Harvard Divinity School graduate who was previously Minister of the Middleboro First Unitarian Society. She is an occasional guest columnist for the Quincy Patriot Ledger and author of " Life Tides" a meditation manual published in 1983 and now out of print, and "Evening Tide" a new book of meditations to be published by Skinner House (an imprint of Beacon Press) in January 1988.

Congregational polity, a practice with roots in the religion of the pilgrims of the Plymouth colony, means that each Unitarian Universalist congregation is responsible for choosing its own minister. First Parish began the search process two years ago and chose Rev. Tarbox unanimously last May. During the installation ceremony, the newly-called minister and the congregation covenant to work and worship together.

Ministerial colleagues participating on Sunday will include Charles Gaines and Jean (Jenny) Rankin, each of whom served a one-year term as interim minister at First Parish after the sudden death of the late Rev. Edward T. Atkinson in 1995 . Several Unitarian Universalist ministers from the region will also contribute, and the Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church will offer greetings on behalf of Cohasset clergy.

Parishioners participating will include Mrs. Edward T. (Sally) Atkinson; Jane Goedecke, chair of the Search Committee which recommended Tarbox for the congregation's approval; Barbara Bush, Parish committee chair; and Jacqueline Beauregard Clark, director of religious education.

The service will include two anthems by the senior choir, directed by Carolyn Curtis: Parry's " I Was Glad They Said Unto Me" and Handl's "Hallelujah. We Sing With Joy".

Scituate woman involved in Cohasset crash dies

Intersection improvements are slated

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

The driver of the car that killed a Scituate woman in a Sept. 27 collision in Cohasset died Tuesday at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth.

Meade, 79, a Scituate resident for more than 40 years, suffered chest injuries following the accident and had to be transported to South Shore Hospital, said her niece Nancy Berberick of Hull. After initial treatment, Mead was transferred to a nursing home for rehabilitation but was readmitted to South Shore Hospital after complaining of abdominal pains, she said.

The cause of death was not available.

"It could have been related to the accident," Berberick said. "She had her ups and downs. There were days when she was doing well. The last time I saw her, she was doing very poorly."

Mead, the widow of Walter Mead, worked as a waitress and a home health aide for many years.

On the morning of the accident, Cohasset Police Officer Richard Yocum, who was on patrol at the intersection of Beechwood Street and Route 3A in Cohasset, observed Mead's 1988 Dodge Shadow run a red light.

As a result, Mead's car struck the 1997 Saab driven by Scituate resident Helen Butler, killing her daughter, Johanna, 20.

"She was convinced it was not her fault," Berberick said of her late aunt. "She never ran a red light in her life. She drove like a snail. She was an extremely cautious person; I can't imagine her being careless."

Cohasset Police charged Mead with motor vehicle homicide and failure to stop for a red light, said chief Brian Noonan.

A trial to hear the case had been set for Nov. 20 in Quincy District Court. Police were scheduled to appear in court today, Nov. 13, to vacate the charges, Noonan said.

"She was very sorry that there was a death involved, but she didn't feel directly responsible," Berberick said.

Intersection improvements

Noonan said yesterday the Massachusetts Highway Department responded to a letter he wrote asking for improvements to the intersection, which has been the site of nine accidents since it was redesigned in August.

The state may begin making improvements to the intersection - which was redesigned during construction of the new Shaw's supermarket - as early as next week, he said. The green light on Beechwood Street would be extended from six seconds to eight seconds. "Drop lane" signs would be added along Route 3A to warn drivers to merge from two lanes to one lane. Signs alerting the driver to upcoming traffic signals would also be installed on Route 3A. And lanes designating an optional right turn will help steer cars safely in their intended directions, officials hope.

"I think a lot of it is just education for drivers. People have to learn how to drive safely through the intersection," Noonan said. "I think they need to be more polite about it, instead of racing to try to cut other people off."

Ambulance billing update

The fire department billed for 34 ambulance transports last month for a total of $12,304.02. During the same time period, $10,459.30 was collected.

So far this year, the fire department has collected $36,234.23 out of a possible $44,976.17 in outstanding ambulance bills.

Tax rate stays the same for FY'98

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

There were no surprises at the tax classification hearing this week.

As predicted, the town will stick with a single tax rate for fiscal year 1998 because it doesn't have enough commercial/industrial/personal property valuations to justify a split tax rate. Towns with split tax rates charge businesses a higher rate than homeowners.

"A split tax rate should be not considered if the combined valuation of commercial, industrial and personal property does not equal at least 25 percent of the total taxable valuation of the town," assistant assessor appraiser Cheryl Pooler said.

Cohasset's tax base is 92.5 percent residential

The tax rate will remain the same at $15.05 per $1,000 of assessed valuation. That means the owner of a $300,000 home will pay $4,515 in property taxes.

Town Manager Mark Haddad pointed out that although the tax rate remained the same, there were mid-term revaluations which adjusted values.

He explained that homeowners will not pay the same amount in taxes if their values changed.

The town's total valuation is $880,023,961 of that $814,074,690 is residential. Commercial contributes $50,706,300 to the total; industrial is $5,036,400 and personal property is $10,206,571.

Volunteers for village task force

Selectmen are seeking two citizens at large to serve on the newly formed village task force which will be charged with coming up with a master plan for village improvements.

Other members will include representatives from the board of selectmen, planning board, historical commission, zoning board, design review, village renaissance and village revitalization committees. Interested citizens should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 or stop by the selectmen's office on the second floor at town hall.

Selectmen also gave the go ahead for Dean Rizzo of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce to work on a Request for Proposal to hire a consultant to do the necessary design and engineering work for the proposed brick sidewalk in the village along North Main Street from Jason Road to Elm Street. Town meeting appropriated $10,000 for the consultant.

Typically, negotiations begin with an "ascertainment" hearing by the town, at which time residents and community stake-holders state the services they would like to see in the renewed contract.

But members of the cable TV committee don't yet know what kind of services and upgrades are included in the ongoing upgrade.

"MediaOne is upgrading service to include fiber-optics at the neighborhood level, upgraded service, cable modems for Internet access, and more channels," Hillman said. "I think some of the things people are going to ask for at the ascertainment phase are things they will be getting in the upgrade."

Hillman used the new History Channel as an example of what he was describing. Hillman said about 90 percent of current subscribers probably want The History Channel on cable.

But it's possible that MediaOne may offer The History Channel as part of its upgraded service.

And that is exactly what is going to happen.

Mary McLaughlin, director of government affairs for MediaOne, said The History Channel will be offered after the upgrade is complete. The History Channel is projected to cost 95 cents a month as part of a basic subscriber's package.

> "MediaOne is upgrading service to include fiber-optics at the neighborhood level, upgraded service, cable modems for Internet access, and more channels."
> ROBERT HILLMAN, CABLE-TV COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN.

Fiber-optics cable

McLaughlin said MediaOne is planning to complete the new upgrades by the beginning of 1998. The new fiber-optics cable will increase the capacity of the system from 550 megahertz (MHz) to about 750 MHz, which will increase the capacity of the system by about 20 channels.

MediaOne is in renewal negotiations with six South Shore towns that are part of the same group: Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Hanover, Hull and Scituate.

McLaughlin said the service upgrade is being performed in all towns in the local group. She said additional channel capacity is usually an integral part of contract renewals.

But the upgrade will add additional channels. McLaughlin said Scituate will not be seeking additional channels in its contract renewal because of the additional channels coming in January.

Sometime in the first quarter of 1998, subscribers will also be able to get Internet access through their cable.

McLaughlin said the Internet service costs $39.95 a month for unlimited service without tying up a telephone line or paying for telephone time units. She added that high-speed cable modems out-perform the fastest computer modems currently in use.

"There is an astounding difference in the speed of a cable modem," Hillman agreed. "You can hook your computer through your cable provider for better and more reliable service."

Hillman said with all these new services coming to Cohasset, it really makes little sense to begin ascertainment hearings.

Once the ascertainment phase begins, the cable TV committee will seek input from residents, schools, town government, cultural centers the library and other stake-holders.

"The ascertainment phase is where the community assesses its future needs," Hillman said. "We also have to assess any additional services we request because there can be pass-through charges on anything we ask for."

McLaughlin said MediaOne will conduct its own ascertainment process once upgrades are complete. She said MediaOne would probably send a survey to subscribers asking them to rate the company's performance and state what they need from cable in the future.

The company tries to tailor services to the needs of each community. Some communities place a high emphasis on Public Education and Government (PEG) programming (sometimes known as local access or local origination), while others emphasize school programming or institutional networks to connect town government via computer.

"We try to look to individual communities and tailor a package to their needs," McLaughlin said.

Towns have little leverage

Once negotiations get underway, towns have very little leverage in renewal hearings. Government regulations practically force towns to renew the license of the original cable company.

Unlike other contracts, towns cannot just invite in competing bids and accept the lowest bid.

Cable companies received this bargaining leverage from the government in exchange for spending hundreds of millions of dollars wiring communities cable service more than a decade ago.

Towns cannot set rates or demand specific channels.

Towns may deny a license and invite in a new company only by finding the current provider in violation of four narrow criteria:

- finding that the cable provider has not complied with all the terms of the current contract or applicable laws;
- finding that the quality of service, response to subscribers' complaints and billing practices have been unreasonable in light of community needs, but this cannot be based on the mix and quality of cable services;
- finding that the cable company does not have the requisite financial, legal and technical ability to fulfill its license;
- finding that the cable company's proposal is not reasonable to meet the future cable-related community needs and interests, taking into account the cost of meeting such needs.

Hillman said the only condition that towns can normally use for a basis of denial is the last option, which refers to the provider not meeting the community's needs.

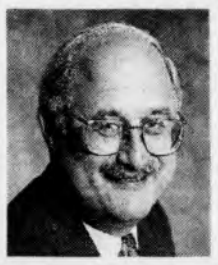
The only other leverage a town has is to limit the length of a contract. Federal regulations allow towns to renew a license for up to 10 years. But if the renewal is unsatisfactory, a town can limit it to one or two years.

But at the end of any contract, towns are still forced to negotiate with their current provider.

Hillman expects to begin ascertainment hearings as soon as MediaOne finished upgrading the system.

County Engineers work in town

The Norfolk County Engineering Dept. recently completed an extension of its work on King Street in Cohasset. The work was requested by the Cohasset Selectmen.



The work consisted of an on-the-ground field survey and the preparation of plans to show the existing conditions of King Street from Pond Street to Beechwood Street. The Engineering Dept. had previously completed the section from Chief Justice Cushing Highway (Route 3A) to Pond Street. The length of these two sections of roadway together total about 4,400 feet.

The County Engineering Dept. has also recently surveyed and prepared plans for work to be done at the intersection of Ripley Road and North Main Street for placement of a new sidewalk.

More lottery money for Cohasset

A new windfall in state aid from the Massachusetts Lottery is slated for a December payoff. Though the share Cohasset can expect to bank is still undecided, the Massachusetts Municipal Association has published a preliminary estimate of $15,035. If so, the new installment would push Cohasset's total receipts for the lottery state aid up to $345,208. However, the MMA estimate is unofficial, according to fiscal policy analyst John Robertson, and is subject to review by the State Comptroller. Furthermore, the Executive Office of Administration and Finance is likely to make a decision about the formula used to distribute the pot among the cities and towns. Overall, about $25 million in new surplus lottery funds is at stake. The extra earnings are due to a boost in interest income combined with a drop in the Lottery Commission's operating expenses and "other positive year-end reconciliations," Robertson said.

South Shore Art Center's Dia de los Muertos

The musical group Sirius Coyote will perform Mexican songs and stories at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset Friday, Nov. 14, as part of a re-creation of the Mexican holiday of All Saint's Day, commonly known as the Day of the Dead.

Public school students from Scituate and Hingham as well as Cohasset will gather at the Art Center beginning at 3 :30 p.m. to display offrenda, or offerings to their family ancestors. At 4 p.m. Sirius Coyote will lead a procession to nearby Central Cemetery with flowers, candles, and ceremonial bread to continue the celebration. Back at the Art Center by 5 p.m., Sirius Coyote will offer a lively concert of Mexican traditions. The public is welcome to attend the festivities and is urged to dress warmly. In case of bad weather, the entire program will occur at the South Shore Art Center.

Sirius Coyote will stay on into the evening to provide music for a reception for two Mexican artists with a joint exhibition. Diamantina Gonzalez Gomez's contemporary paintings entitled Earth, Myth, and Soil and Juan Alberto Mancilla's mixed-media series Times in New York will occupy the Art Center's Bancroft Gallery through Dec. 21. The opening reception, which is scheduled from 6 to 8 p.m., is free and open to the public.

On Saturday morning, Nov. 15, Juan Alberto Mancilla will provide a Printmaking Workshop for families. This creative session is a unique opportunity for parents and children to meet an internationally renowned artist and make collages utilizing anything from fallen leaves to aluminum foil! The workshop will begin at 10 a.m. and end at 11:30 a.m. Cost will be $10 per family for members or $15 for non-members.

On Saturday afternoon from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Nancy Connolly will lead a workshop in Mexican Folk Art Traditions. Children in grades 1 to 6 will learn to craft clay sun faces, paper flowers, and pinata ornaments. Participants will also decorate a Tree of Life mural and paint greeting cards to take home. The cost of $15 per family for members or $20 for non-members includes all materials and supplies. Call 383-2787 to register.

Hip, hip, horray!! Leo's Exxon is open for business. And, wait until you see it, what a great little store it is! And, the Dunkin Donut drive thru is such an added bonus for "that neck of the woods"; it must be really great, we spotted Bob Fiori munching a breakfast goodie the other day! He sure will have to watch it, they are irresistible. Anyway, Bob and Leo are so happy to be back. ELDER SERVICES MONEY TALK

Had a very informative note from John Coe. He wanted everyone to know that the South Shore Elder Services in partnership with HESSCO Elder Services in Sharon, will meet Tuesday, Nov. 18, at 2 p.m. at the Cohasset Senior Center. Does this sound like you? Good with numbers and finances, especially maintaining a household budget? Have you worked with elders, either as a volunteer or in your own personal life? Do you respect the rights and concerns of elders? Enjoy problem solving, especially when it comes to issues concerning money? Do you have compassion for elders and others struggling for financial existence on meager incomes? Are you looking to give back to the community? If so, then money management may be the volunteer opportunity you've been seeking. Adults of all ages are invited to go Nov. 18 to learn more on how to help in your own town. For more information about money management call 383-9112 (Kathy Bryanton) or Linda Fitzgibbon at 848-3910.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

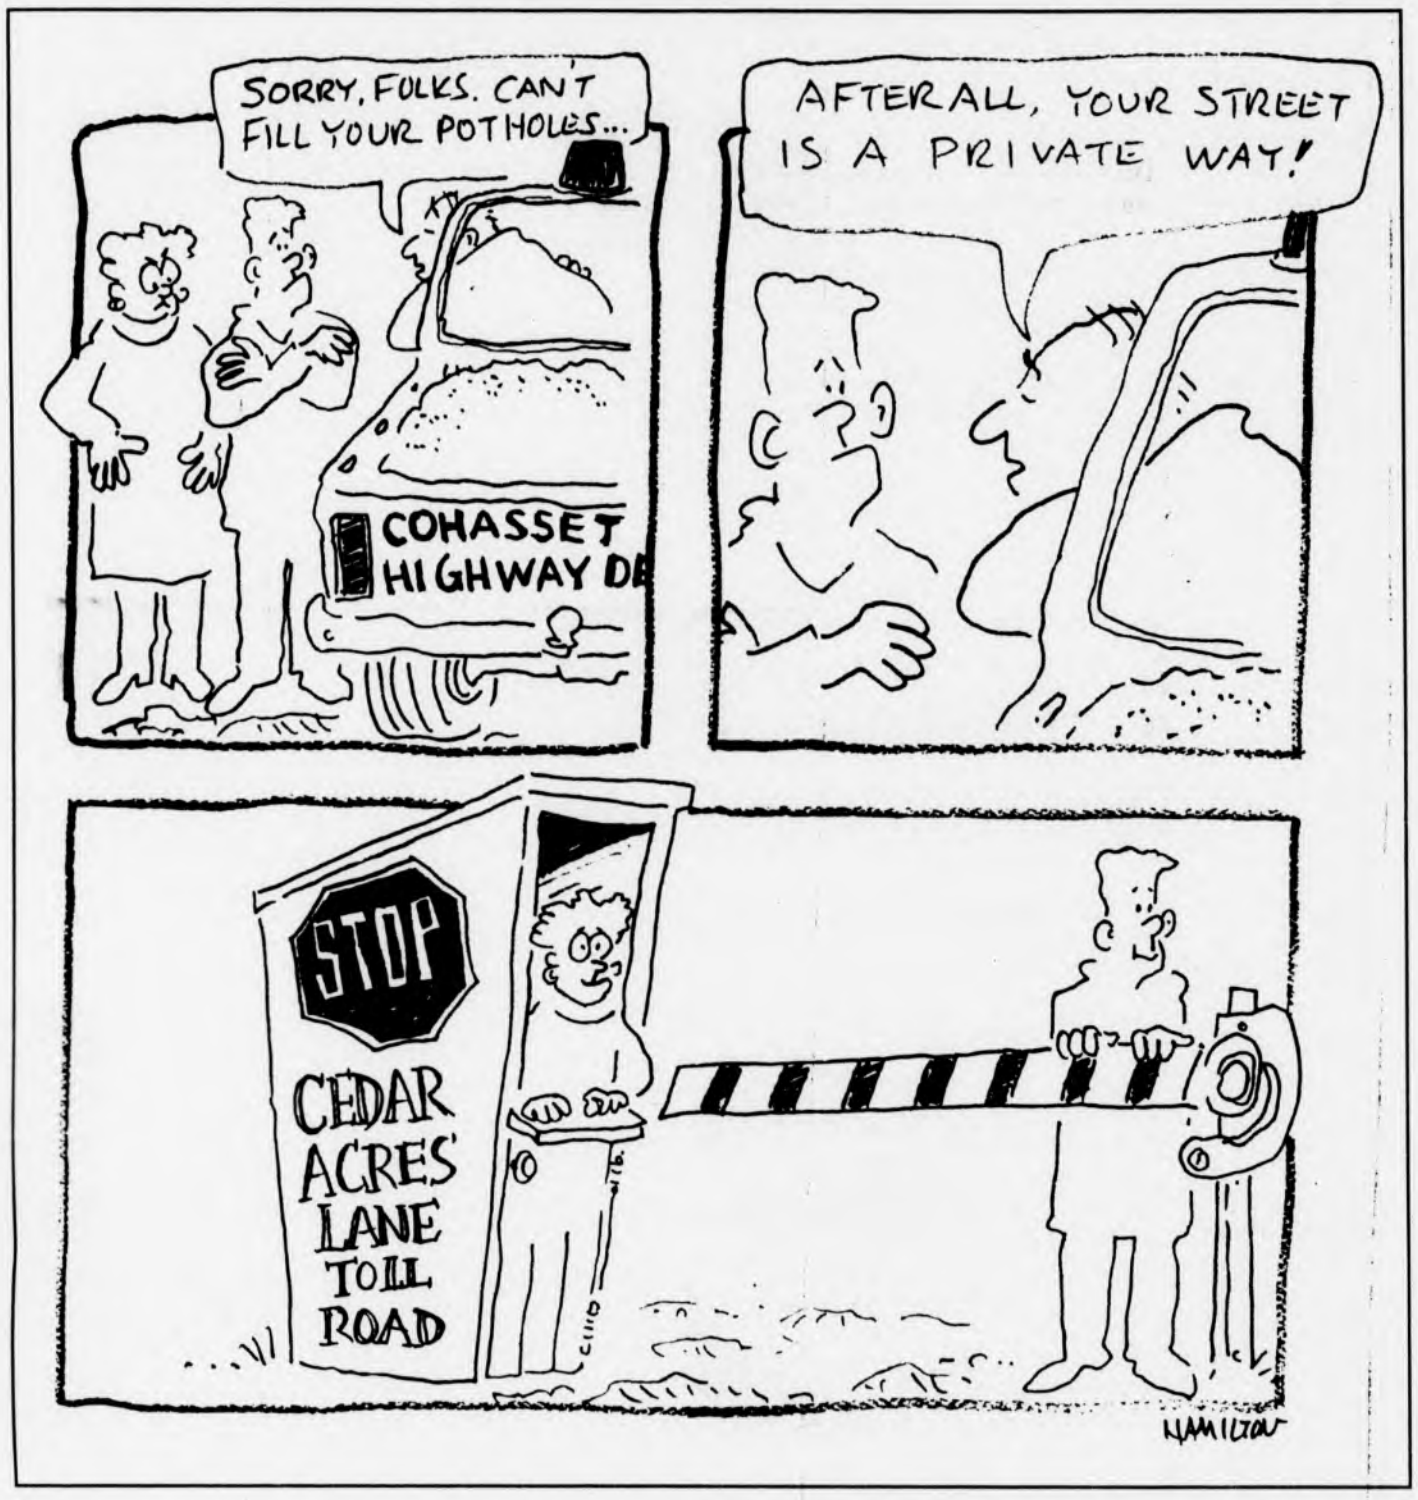
A time to give

On my way out of the Star Market in Norwell this week, I checked out Cheryl Coates' food fundraising bin, and I'm glad to report it was full to overflowing with both canine and feline cuisine.

The same is true, I hear of the containers Coates placed in the Cohasset Shaw's and Stop and Shop markets — and its a good thing. Because, while the Eleanor Haughey Animal Shelter (serving Scituate, Norwell, Cohasset and Hingham) is short on food and supplies this fall, its chock full of dogs and cats. Coates' creative fundraising idea is literally getting the shelter through its food crisis, said shelter director Joan McCafferty.

A busy sales executive, Coates didn't have time to pitch in walking dogs like other shelter volunteers, but determined to help, she devised another way to give her support. In addition to the grocery store bins which are emptied daily and updated weekly letting shoppers know the shelter's immediate needs, Coates has sold, raffled and will auction off a collection of hand-painted furniture she's designed. Depicting our beautiful local scenery, Coates sold a ladder-back chair for $150 this spring, and helped the shelter rake in $2,500 in raffle ticket sales for a hand-painted coffee table during Scituate's Heritage days and Octoberfest.

With the holidays around the corner, Coates is accepting bids on a hand-painted trunk and a corner cupboard that will be auctioned off in December. Both pieces are on display at Flowers and Festivities in Scituate Harbor.



Eager to help, but humble, Coates says her contribution is small compared to the hard work and long hours that devoted volunteers put in to keep the shelter running. But we think it's great that Coates cared enough to come up with what has turned out to be a very lucrative way to benefit the unwanted, abandoned and stray animals throughout our communities.

And animals are not the only ones in need. Winter is fast approaching — a time when area food pantries need to stock up to feed hungry families. The Salvation Army's familiar red bucket will soon take up residence outside busy stores, and programs like "Toys for Tots" are gearing up to make less fortunate children's holiday wishes come true. There are so many ways to give of ourselves if we take the time.

Hopefully, Coates' efforts will be an inspiration for others to lend a hand, make a donation, or reach out to someone in need during this season of giving.

To A Lobsterman Lost

In Memory of George Kauffman

On the eve of All Saints
In the sea there was lost,
A man whose livelihood
Extracted its cost.

His ocean brothers
Were there at dawn,
Thinking and guessing
What might have gone wrong.

"The knife was ready, plunged into the stern."
"His line was trapped, That's what I've heard."

Knowing the same fate
Could visit them,
Stained the faces
Of these weathered men.

Each waterman's features
Betrayed his rent heart,
Not wanting a comrade
Like this to depart.

Earnest words of slim hope
Were passed around.
Yet their eyes betrayed
What they knew might be found.

Would not their mate
Arise from the grip
Of Neptune's dark chasm
In search of his ship?

All to a man knows,
His thoughts do nag,
That when ill luck
Causes a line to snag,

In such a way that
All experience honed,
Is meaningless to help
When God calls one home.

They knew George would say,
"Don't worry 'bout me friends.
Take care of my family -
Their needs and their ends."

Standing in thought
Of others gone west,
These seamen understood,
Their fragility's test.

Looking to the gray sea
Their gaze was forlorn,
Holding onto this memory
These men will go on.

As an outsider I write
Like Ismael of the whale,
To record what I witnessed
Of this emotional gale.

It's to these men of the sea
I dedicate this poem,
And hope, in the future,
All safely come home.

Hedlund earns praise from Malone, Anderson

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund has the kind of numbers that many candidates only dream about.

A year ago, the 36-year-old Weymouth Republican was reelected in a landslide when many of his party were defeated. His stunning victory in the district which stretches from Weymouth to Duxbury included taking Hull and all but one precinct in Weymouth —both Democratic Party strongholds.

"Bob marches to his own drumbeat and doesn't worry about flack in the newspapers."
— STATE TREASURER AND GUBERNATORIAL CANDIDATE, JOE MALONE.

So it's no surprise that Hedlund's first fund-raiser of the 1998 campaign — a $100 a plate breakfast last Friday at Tosca in Hingham — was a sell-out.

"This is the biggest ever for Hedlund," said Carl Harris of the Hingham Republican Town Committee.

The state senator known for his blue collar roots — who lost the seat in 1992 and clawed his way back in 1994 — has earned top billing among his fellow Republicans.

And state Treasurer Joe Malone — who seeks to unseat acting Gov. Paul Cellucci for the Republican party nomination for governor — is no exception.

Looking rested after spending the night in Hingham, Malone said the dearth of Republicans in the state senate is a sad story. Hedlund is one of only 7 out of 40 senators in the legislature.

"We've got to protect those good ones," he said.

Malone, who said he has watched Hedlund since he was first elected in 1990, praised Hedlund for voting his conscience and exhibiting "backbone" on Beacon Hill.

"Bob marches to his own drumbeat and doesn't worry about flack in the newspapers," Malone said.

"He's a good listener — someone who goes off and does the right thing."

Special guest Barbara Anderson, director of Citizens for Limited Taxation, said Hedlund is one of the few legislators she feels like talking to on Beacon Hill.

CLT is promoting a citizens petition asking for a roll-back of the 5.95 percent state income tax rate over three years to 5 percent. When the tax increase to 5.95 percent passed in 1989, it was billed as "temporary," Anderson said.

Hedlund backs the tax roll-back and filed a bill — which was ignored, according to Anderson — which would have made the citizens petition unnecessary.

Hedlund said the legislature is working overtime to spend the state's $1 billion surplus.

"We are kind of regressing to the situation in the last 1980s which motivated me to run," Hedlund said. "Can we afford it (tax roll back)? The answer is, yes we can afford it," he said.

Other guests at Friday's breakfast included Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Forman, Plymouth County District Attorney Michael Sullivan, state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray and former state Sen. William Weeks.

Hedlund holds town hall office hours

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and/or members of his staff will be at the Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Avenue for office hours the third Thursday of each month. On Nov. 20, from 10 to 11 a.m. the state senator and/or his staff will be available to meet and/or assist residents.

In addition, Sen. Hedlund's district office, located at 66 Sea St. in Weymouth, will be open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The telephone number is (781) 340-9866.

"The whole purpose of my district office is to meet with and serve my constituents in a more accessible and convenient setting," Hedlund said. "It means a lot to me to be able to talk with constituents face to face. Together we can get a lot done."

From the Free University of Berlin it's Diana 101

When the National Enquirer comes can academia be far behind?

The Free University of Berlin has started a lecture series on the late Princess of Wales.

It's called "Myths & Politics: Diana — from the Princess of Wales to the Queen of Hearts."

Shall we call it just "Diana 101?"

The basic object of the course is to find out why Western Civilization as we know it stood still and mailmen and the men from FTD got hernias from carrying condolence cards and flowers from complete strangers when the Princess died.

Who knows, says assistant professor Sabine Berghahn, one of the organizers of the lecture series, if things go well with Di, maybe they'll study Che Guevara and Marilyn Monroe next semester.

The lecture series got off and running last Thursday with an examination of the topic: "Torn World and Hidden Meaning — On the Function of Mythical Figures for the Modern Age."

Then, "Love, Publicity and a State Funeral — About Feelings as a Resource for Political Rule" and, finally, "The People's Princess — The Cult of Mary and the Adoration of Lady Di."

Might I suggest that they're going a bit too far with this Diana thing?

Just the other day, I think it was in a promo for a TV show, I distinctly heard the announcer call Diana "the most important woman of the 20th Century."

Gosh, I thought Eleanor Roosevelt or Golda Meir or Mother Teresa might have gotten a little consideration but I guess I just haven't been able to keep up with what's important.

In a month or so, the Associated Press will start polling editors to select the 10 most important news stories of 1997.

Whaddya bet that the death of Princess Di in that Paris auto accident doesn't head the list, even when it includes things like the discovery of "life" on Mars in the Antarctic rocks and the cloning of sheep.

Of course, her nearest competition for news story of the year probably will involve someone like Paula Corbin Jones or Wilfredo Cordero or Marv Albert or even the au pair Louise Woodward.

Or Michael Kennedy.

Princess Di was hardly buried before the African country known as the Togolaise Republic was hustling a limited edition of nine stamps featuring "the most beloved lady of our time" clad in various high-fashion gowns.

The stamps can't be used for postage outside the 21,000 square miles of Togo (about the size of West Virginia) but already, says John Van Emden of the International Collectors Society, "our phones have been ringing off the hook."

"Experts are already predicting that this Princess Diana issue will be the most sought after collectible stamp of all time," says the quarter page ads promoting the set.

And you thought the Elvis Presley stamp was popular.

The car wreck in which Diana was killed happened Aug. 31 and two and a half months later, she is still a popular subject for the TV newsmagazines.

The Video Information Show Report, which keeps an eye on such things, reported that in the month following her death there were 360 segments involving Diana. And in the month of October she was still topping the list as the subject of 96 segments.

The whole Kennedy family had only 34.

Army Corps wants a look at rail alternatives

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

As part of their response, the Corps expects the MBTA to develop an additional alternative, which includes combinations of previous ones. These include: all phases of the HOV (high occupancy vehicle) lane; on the Expressway; bus service with service level comparable to the train; an Accord terminal; and boat service from Scituate with 57-knot boats and feeder bus service and boat service from Hingham.

The Army Corps of Engineers has extended the MBTA's Oct. 31 deadline until Nov. 14 to provide additional information about the transit authority's Greenbush rail restoration proposal.

The possibility of a tunnel under Hingham Square has not been ruled out, nor has a proposal to build an Accord terminal in the area of the Rt. 228 Hingham exit near the Home Depot..

Following a public hearing held in August, the Corps requested the transit authority reply to comments made at the hearing and through letters, as well as provide additional information involving, in part, alternatives to rail restoration.

While MBTA spokesman Brian Pedro stated last month that the transit authority has ruled out an Accord stop, Ted Lento of the Corps sees the issue differently.

"The MBTA has ruled out both a tunnel and an Accord terminal, but to satisfy our requirements for a permit (to build the Greenbush line) they need to provide us with more information," he said.

According to Lento, the tunnel option has always been controversial because of its cost.

"But it hasn't been (put aside). There will be more discussion about it in the future," he said.

The process has taken longer than some people have expected, he said.

"The public hearing was just the first phase. It's going to be a slow process over a period of several months," he said. "It's such a big project that the MBTA hasn't been able to answer all the questions yet." Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan said the "news" is that the Corps is "standing by their guns and saying they're not yet convinced that some of the alternatives to rail restoration can be ruled out. The most environmentally damaging alternative (Greenbush restoration) is the one they're proposing to do."

Pedro could not be reached for comment. As part of their response, the Corps expects the MBTA to develop an additional alternative, which includes combinations of previous ones. These include: all phases of the HOV (high occupancy vehicle) lane; on the Expressway; bus service with service level comparable to the train; an Accord terminal; and boat service from Scituate with 57-knot boats and feeder bus service and boat service from Hingham.

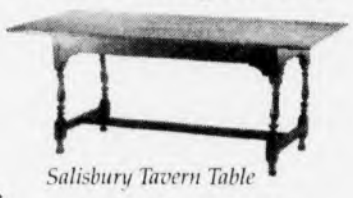
"The Corps has emphasized that the burden is on the MBTA, and they haven't yet met that burden," Macmillan said.

In a letter to the MBTA, Karen Kirk Adams of the Corps said, "As you (MBTA) indicated previously, submittal of the requested information will be made as (it) is available over the course of the next several months.

Adams indicated, however, that a partial response must be made by Nov. 14, along with providing a schedule indicating when the remainder of the information will be submitted. According to notes taken by Corps staff members from an Oct. 17 meeting between the Corps and the MBTA regarding the Greenbush project, the following alternatives have been dismissed from further consideration based on information already available or obtained at the October meeting: diesel-powered commuter rail service to Greenbush with a bypass around the Hingham Square area; electrified commuter rail service; monorail along Route 3; light rail, trackless trolley or busway on Greenbush right-of-way to the Braintree Red Line terminal; and transportation systems management measures applied to Route 3A.

Also discussed at the meeting was the possibility that the guided busway and tunnel option be considered by the Corps as mitigation efforts. Following the meeting, however, Christine Godfrey of the Army Corps of Engineers acknowledged the tunnel is appropriate as a minimization effort, but the busway is a different mode of transportation and should be given full consideration as a separate alternative.

Other combinations of alternatives using the busway may be required by the Corps but will be discussed at a later date.



"The process will take us into the spring at least," Macmillan predicted.

The MBTA schedule for providing additional information to the Corps is contingent on some specific items, including a summary of mitigation costs and an explanation of why alternatives along Route 3 do not serve the Greenbush corridor.

Lento said the final phase of the process will involve Section 106 negotiations (under the National Historic Preservation Act).

"In order to issue a permit to the MBTA, we have to prove the project complies with those requirements," Lento said.

Increase in burial fees okay'ed

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

It will cost more to be buried in Cohasset.

This week selectmen adopted the town's new cemetery regulations which include increases in the price of graves and burials.

The price of a grave rises from $500 to $725 for residents and from $700 to $1,000 for former residents.

Opening a grave for burials remains at $200 from April 1 through Oct. 31 but rises to $300 from Nov. 1 through March 31.

The new regulations provide for burial of one person in a vault and one person who has been cremated in a gravesite or for the burial of four persons who have been cremated.

The new regulations not only prohibit vandalism but do not allow snowmobiles, all terrain vehicles, roller-blades, skateboard, horses or horseback riding in the town's cemeteries.

The burial of pets is also prohibited.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the price increase is needed to cover perpetual care at the cemeteries. The regulations also address creating space for cremated remains, she said.

Rate relief possible for Mass-American water users

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

In what Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, calls the biggest hurdle yet to be cleared in the "battle" for water-rate relief, the house ways and means committee has included language in a bill which could benefit Massachusetts-American Water Company (MAWC) customers.

The legislature's natural resources committee approved a bill this summer which could provide significant financial assistance to water company customers in Hingham, Cohasset and Hull, who pay an average yearly water bill of $713. That rate is the highest in the state.

But in order to benefit MAWC customers, "grand fathering" language, which would allow some of the funds to be spent in part on water treatment plants operated by private companies such as MAWC, needed to be included. Hedlund sponsored an amendment which incorporated the language into the bill setting up the rate-relief proposal.

Grand-fathered projects are considered to be ones under which water supply facilities were built in order to comply with federal safe drinking water regulations. Grandfathered projects were completed before the revolving fund program was implemented.

While the language was accepted as part of the initial bill, it also needed to be included in the appropriation portion of the bill, which funds the project, in order for it to benefit MAWC customers.

"Short of getting the bill enacted, getting the language in place is key," Hedlund said, "because if the wording appears in both versions, it stays in the bill."

"I'm thrilled, and I hope this will provide some rate relief."
– STATE REP. MARY JEANETTE MURRAY.

The house adopted the language on Monday. The Senate ways and means committee will also need to accept the wording when it considers the bill.

That shouldn't be difficult, since the senator has already received Chairman Stanley Rosenberg's word that the language in the Senate version will be adjusted to match that in the house version, according to Hedlund.

The bill, filed by former Gov. William Weld, would create a drinking water state revolving fund (SRF) which would provide $450 million in financial assistance during the next five years to water suppliers, who would then be expected to use the state assistance to reduce water rates.

Eighty percent of the funds are provided by the federal government.

The Senate has already placed $8 million in a fund earmarked to benefit customers of grandfathered projects in the state, which would include MAWC. That amount is $2 million more than was originally slated to be set aside.

About $1.5 million of that is expected to benefit MAWC customers, according to Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset.

"I'm thrilled, and I hope this will provide some rate relief," she said.

According to Joseph Callanan, Hedlund's legislative director, that means $8 million in state assistance will be allocated each year for the next 10 years for grandfathered companies.

Hedlund said Hingham, Hull and Cohasset officials who testified at a rate-relief hearing in July were instrumental in helping the bill move forward. Hingham selectmen Katharine Reardon and Michael Holden were among the testifiers speaking in favor of including private companies in the bill.

According to Hedlund, MAWC would need to make an application for the money. He emphasized that any benefit derived from the SRF is meant for customers, not for the water companies.

Phone system is on agenda

Town Manager Mark Haddad will discuss improving the town hall's telephone system with selectmen Monday night.

He suggests adding 14 more lines so each department can be dialed directly.

"I believe direct dial will provide better servcie to our residents and free up staff to be utilized more effectively," Haddad wrote in his weekly report to selectmen.

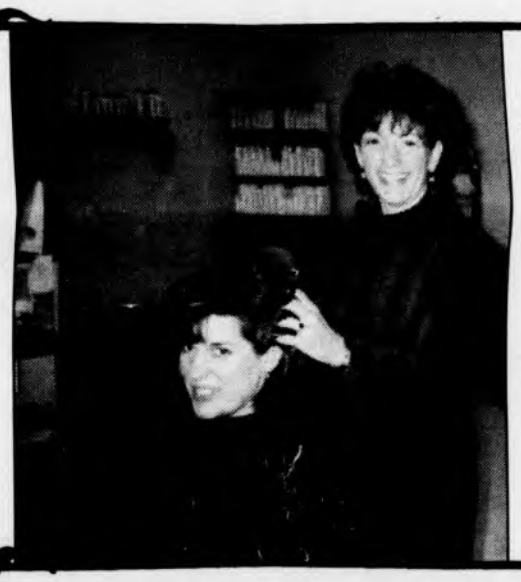
The improvements would have a one-time cost of $1226 and additional fiscal year 1998 service costs of about $2500.

Fire overtime to be scrutinized

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen Monday that the fire department has already used $70,000 out of its $120,000 overtime budget.

He said if the fire department went through the year at this pace, it would spend $280,000 on overtime.

Selectmen were alarmed by the overtime costs and asked Haddad to track it on a weekly basis.



Twenty thousand of the $70,000 used has been for sick time, Haddad said.

He said he and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln would work closely on getting the overtime under control.

Hull museum holds annual meeting

The Hull Lifesaving Museum welcomes Patrick Otton, Chief Engineering Historian for the U.S.S. Constitution to speak at its Annual Meeting. Otton performed essential research into the ship, at the Navy Yard and around the world, for the historic restoration which made possible Constitution's sailing last summer. He will present a slide show and lecture about the fascinating detective work that helped restore America's first commissioned Naval ship to her rightful place of glory. Otton also has been the guiding force behind the stabilization of the historic Boston harbor tugboat Luna, which just has been named a National Landmark.

The HLMI annual meeting will be held Sunday, Nov. 9, 4-6 p.m. at the Station Museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave., Hull. Members: free; non-members $1.

Animal lover gathers trunk-loads of shelter support

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

Scituate resident Cheryl Coates wanted to lend a hand at the Eleanor Haughey Animal Shelter, but her busy work schedule didn't afford her the time to get on the other end of a leash.

Determined to do what she could for the shelter, Coates came up with a creative way to show her support, and has helped bring in more than $2,500 for this worthwhile cause since last spring.

Coates' is a hands-on fundraiser in which she paints furniture with local scenery and in turn sells, raffles or auctions off the pieces to support the shelter and all of its furry inhabitants.

This trunk at Stop & Shop is chock full of goodies for animals at the Scituate Animal Shelter.

Coates' furniture fundraiser began last spring, when she designed and sold for $150 each, two ladderback chairs. One chair depicted Hingham landmarks including Derby Academy and the Old Ship Church and sold within 24 hours at Bowl & Board on North Street in Hingham. The other chair featured Scituate scenes, including sail boats, the Old Oaken Bucket, and both the Scituate and Minot's Ledge Lighthouses. It too, sold quickly at Flowers and Festivities on Front Street.

For heritage days, Coates painted a Scituate coffee table which the shelter raffled during the weekend long celebration and again during the North Scituate Octoberfest festivities. According to Shelter Director Joan McCafferty, more than $2,500, $1 dollar raffle tickets were sold.

Serving several south shore towns including Hingham, Cohasset and Norwell, the busy, "no-kill" shelter located on the driftway in Scituate has placed 810 animals - both cats and dogs - since opening in May 1993. In the last six months alone, the shelter has "adopted out" 130 dogs and cats - two of them to Coates. But despite its success rate in finding homes for its inhabitants, the shelter faces an on-going struggle to finance the high costs of feeding and providing medical care to the stray, and abandoned animals it harbors. This summer alone more than $10,000 has been spent in medical bills, and by last month, the shelter had expended its entire food budget - a budget that will not be renewed until June.

Shelter cats Janet and Chrissy pose with one of their biggest supporters, Cheryl Coates. Coates' furniture fund-raising efforts have raised more than $2,500 for the Eleanor Haughey Animal Shelter in Scituate.

It was this most recent news that pushed Coates into action again. Two newer pieces of furniture, a small corner cupboard and a rope-handle trunk painted during the summer with Scituate scenes is now available by silent auction at Flowers and Festivities. The trunk features a sailing ship and the cupboard's door shows Scituate Light on the outside, Minot's Ledge Light on the inside. A single black whale tops the cupboard off. Bidding for both pieces starts at $100 and bids will be accepted until Dec. 15. Along with the furniture on display, Coates has placed a donation box for the shelter at Flowers and Festivities.

But that's not all. When she heard that the shelter had spent its food money for the year, she painted three small trunks (about 14 inches by 30 inches) and has placed them at supermarkets in Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell to collect donations of food and other supplies. Coates hope was that shoppers heading out of the stores would reach into their hearts and their shopping carts and pitch in some dog or cat food. Coates said she was overwhelmed by the response.

By the end of the first day, bins at the Stop and Shop and Shaws on Route 3A and the Star Market in Norwell, were filled to the rim. The same has been true of a smaller barrel on display inside the Scituate Marketplace store on Front Street. Coates ran into trouble with the big chain stores initially, but was able to convince store executives that the donation bins meant more sales for their stores, which in many cases are competing with the ware-

Local merchants go to jail for Wellspring

What do the morning crew at Dwyers Cleaning Spot in Cohasset; Mike Feroli, the Village Butcher; and the spirited folks at Village Wine and Spirits all have in common? They've all gone to "jail" on behalf of Wellspring.

These jailbirds are good-natured folks who are also cheerfully accused of 'fine' crimes, and symbolically imprisoned. With the generous help of their customers, they raise bail which is donated to support the many services of Wellspring Multi-Service Center, the South Shore Community Service agency located at 814 Nantasket Ave. in Hull. The Thrift Shop and Food Pantry are only two of the programs at Wellspring. An exemplary adult education program, a responsive domestic violence prevention and counseling program and the holiday food basket program are some others.

Nancy, Debbie, Stephanie, Jamie and Cathy up at Dwyers on Route 3A have been indicted for the second time in as many years for "excellent laundering." Mike's in the clink again, same as this time last year, for his "skillful butchering." We're hoping he makes bail and doesn't have to be "on the lamb." Cliff and the folks at Village Wine and Spirits have only been open a few weeks and they're in the docket for "fine wine-ing." Luckily their cases were continued until Friday, Nov. 7, when they had to pay up or be locked up for good.

Cohasset office awards computer

Hingham Institution for Savings recently announced that Agnes MacDonald of Cohasset was the winner of the computer raffle in the Cohasset Office.

The raffle was held to celebrate Hingham Institution for Savings' very successful first year of operation in Cohasset. It was a means of thanking the Cohasset community for its strong support. Hingham Institution became the leading mortgage lender in Cohasset in early 1997, making more loans in town than any other bank or mortgage company.

Hingham Institution for Savings is a Massachusetts-chartered savings bank located in Hingham. Incorporated in 1834, it is one of the oldest financial institutions headquartered in Massachusetts. The bank's main offices are located on Main Street, Hingham, 02043, (617) 749-2200. The bank also maintains branch offices in South Hingham and the neighboring towns of Hull, Cohasset and Scituate.

Agnes MacDonald, at left, is being congratulated on winning a computer, by Joanne Reynolds, assistant band manager at Hingham Institution for Savings.

Trunk-loads of shelter support house pet supply stores for business.

"Also, people feel better about shopping in a store that supports a worthwhile cause," Coates said.

Since placing the bins a month ago, Coates estimates that more than $300 worth of food has been donated each week. "It's keeping the shelter going," she said.

Coates empties the grocery store containers daily -they fill her entire trunk — and said she is amazed at the number and kinds of contributions being made. By updating the display and changing requested donations from week to week, Coates has been able to meet the shelter's immediate needs. For instance, with an average of three cats for every one dog, more canned and dried cat food has been requested and received. "I have tried to make the bins a communication center for people shopping at the store. I have been astounded at how responsive everyone is. They're taking those pamphlets, reading them and responding," she said.

But food isn't the only contribution's Coates' bins are collecting. When she requested bleach and detergent to wash the shelter's food bowls and towels, gallons of Clorox and Tide were left in the bins or dropped off at the shelter.. McCafferty said two weeks ago a woman drove directly from the Star Market in Norwell to the shelter and handed over a check for $100. Another woman called Sunday to say she had donated $100 worth of top quality food she purchased at the Cohasset Stop and Shop.

"The response has been incredible," McCafferty said, and Coates has become the shelter's favorite philanthropist.

"She's really risen to the occasion," said Animal Control Officer Kim Gilsdorf. "She's done so much for the shelter."

For her part, Coates still says she's humbled by the tireless volunteers that do the really tough work at the shelter, and she's glad she can do her small part.

"I do very little compared to the people who show up and volunteer there every day. This is still just a hobby for me."

A district sales manager for a consumer products company, Coates time is even more limited these days as she has headed back to school to get her MBA. During her four week holday break, Coates hopes to work on a few more pieces to auction or raffle off for the shelter, including a jelly cabinet, and she hopes to feature scenes from Norwell, Cohasset and Hingham. As for the supermarket bins, Coates said she'd like to see them stationed at the stores permenantly.

"My greatest wish is that they stay full, and active 365 days a year," she said. Coates' reminds local residents that all bids on the furniture and all donations made to the shelter are tax deductible.

Surge in antenna towers in town is likely

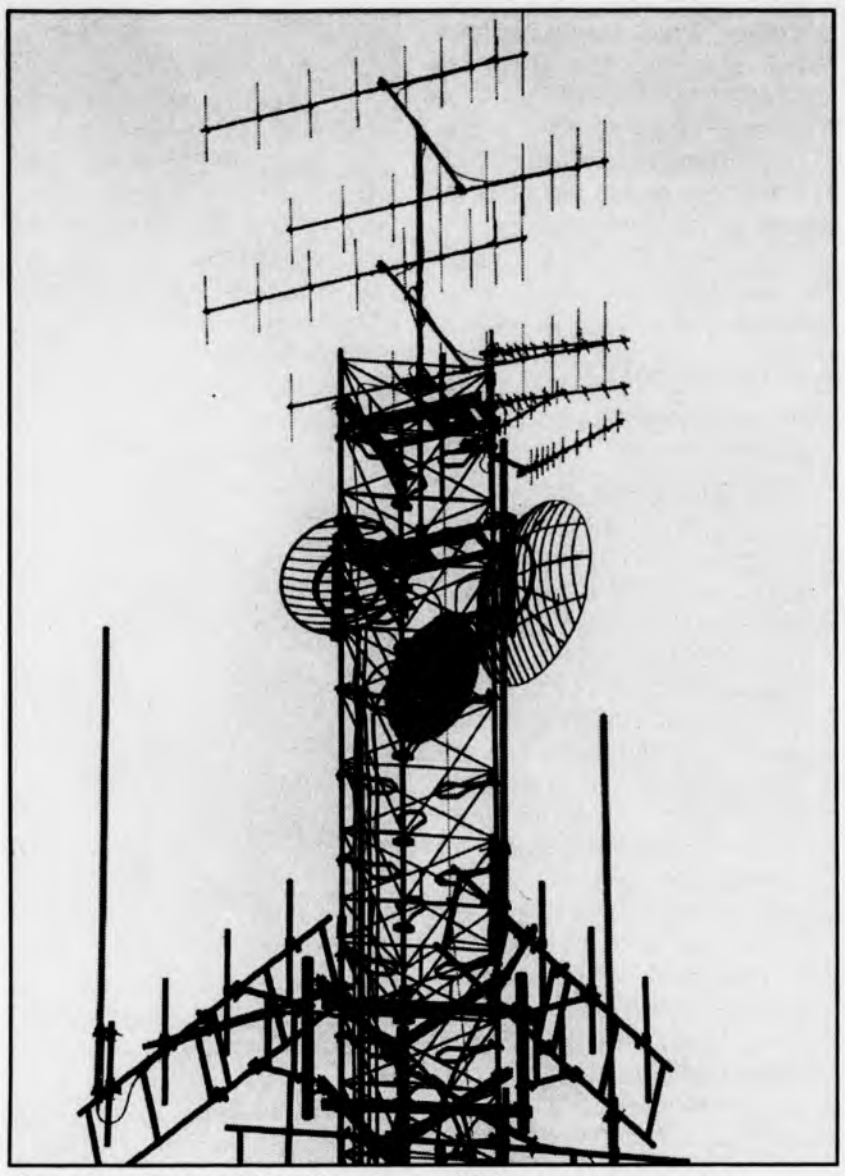
Easton legal case sets precedent

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Requests from wireless communications companies to put towers and antennas in Cohasset have not yet dominated business at the zoning board. But that could change at anytime. Nearby communities like Norwell have been inundated with requests from companies to erect new wireless communications towers and antennas

Town officials say residents should be prepared to accept the inevitability of more towers.

"To some extent, we will have to get used to the presence of more poles," said zoning board Chairman Mark DiGiacomo. "There are three poles in Cohasset now, and it's very likely there will be more."



Some local officials have been alarmed by the large number of requests from communications companies to build towers and antennas in neighboring communities.

"Currently, we don't have any requests before the zoning board for new towers or antennas," DiGiacomo said. "But we keep reading about other towns taking action and I am concerned that Cohasset isn't doing anything to deal with this issue."

Concerns over wireless communications towers and antennas have come to the forefront after a recent decision by a federal judge against the town of Easton for trying to block a new tower.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis forwarded a copy of the decision to town officials with a warning to be careful when considering requests by telecommunications companies to build new towers.

Chief United States District Judge of the U.S. District Court, Joseph Tauro, recently found against the town of Easton for denying an antenna request by Sprint Spectrum L.P.

Antenna towers like this one could become a common occurrence in Cohasset.

Tauro not only found that Easton had violated Sprint's rights under the Telecommunications Act, but he forced the town to reimburse the company for thousands of dollars in legal fees.

Wireless communications is a big business. Telecommunications companies must purchase licenses to provide wireless service from the Federal Communications Commission (FCC).

The FCC awards licenses at auctions, and each license is specific to a limited geographical market. The markets were limited to two providers per region, but that changed in 1996 when President Clinton signed into law the Telecommunications Act.

The Telecommunications Act of 1996 authorized the FCC to allow up to eight companies per market. Telecommunications companies, eager to expand their market share, purchased licenses for as much as $500 million to service a single region.

The federal government has received more than $20 billion in revenue from companies purchasing licenses.

Telecommunications companies say they are responding to the demands of the marketplace. The federal government estimates that the number of Americans using wireless communications will grow from its current level of 40 million users to 100 million by the year 2000.

The introduction of lightweight, hand-held telephones is the main factor driving consumer demand. Americans like being able to carry a calculator-sized telephones to make calls anywhere at anytime.

The Telecommunications Act also places some restrictions on local zoning authority. Zoning boards may still act to preserve the health and safety of residents, to preserve aesthetics, to restrict unsightly construction, and to manage growth.

However, towns cannot prohibit the construction of wireless towers, nor banish towers to undesirable sections of town. Towns must also be careful not to discriminate against some companies over others.

The Act also requires towns to act on requests for towers in a reasonable time-frame. All denials must be issued in writing with a thorough explanation of the reasons the request was rejected.

DeGiacomo said there has been little public opposition in Cohasset to towers because there are so few of the structures and none are in residential zones. But once there are a few more, people could start complaining.

"Generally, after the fifth or sixth pole, people get sick of them, but by then it's too late," DeGiacomo said. "We end up setting a precedent, and one of the key aspects of the federal statute is that we can't discriminate between competing companies."

DeGiacomo said the town needs to prepare for the time when wireless providers turn their eyes toward Cohasset. He said the town should impose a short moratorium, and create special zoning districts or create a tower bylaw.

DeGiacomo added that he would like to see the planning

School board considers new health equipment

By Jason Bouffard
CORRESPONDENT

You may soon start noticing Cohasset High School students looking stronger, faster and heartier.

That spring in their step may be attributed to a greater variety of equipment at the school's wellness-fitness center. The Cohasset School Committee is confident that money can be raised for additional exercise equipment for the new facility.

Committee member Joe McElroy told the school committee at a recent meeting that he may have found a source that can provide refurbished equipment at an affordable price. The West Coast-based supplier would be ready to ship fitness goods soon after receiving a purchase order from the town.

Although discussions with the supplier have involved the purchase of $10,000 worth of equipment, a price tag which may be reduced by simply ordering less. According to McElroy, the focus of any new equipment acquisitions should be on cardiovascular equipment. While fitness center patrons already have access to a good amount of weight lifting equipment, only a limited supply of cardiovascular machines are currently on hand at the facility.

The committee agreed that any purchases of equipment from this supplier would be funded by donations.

"I would be surprised if a donor or two couldn't be found," committee secretary Ralph Kidder said.

In other business:

The school committee elected Kidder to lead a search team for candidates to replace retiring Supt. of Schools Stephen Hart.

Kidder's team, which may include representatives of the teachers, school administrators and parents, will likely grapple with issues such as candidate criteria, where to look for candidates, and whether or not a consultant will be needed to assist in the hiring process.

Kidder will return to the committee Nov. 13 with a report on the progress of his team.

With the September 1998 opening of the new Osgood School now less than a year away, the school committee may start asking town residents what to call the new building.

Committee member Kathy Ofsthun is willing to develop the survey, which would ask town residents if they think the school's name should be changed, and if so, to what.

The committee also discussed including an impartial explanation of the origin of the school's current name in the survey.

board take some kind of planning step as soon as possible.

Planning board Chairman Alfred Moore said the board is not currently considering recommending a moratorium or a change in bylaws.

"There is nothing before us at this time," Moore said. "We have in place a 35-foot height restriction, and anything above that must go before the ZBA. If zoning is crafted well, it might serve to address something that wasn't in existence when the regulations were written, like wireless communication."

Moore also pointed out that wireless communications towers aren't as big as most people imagine. He said many people think of the enormous 500-600 foot towers soaring above the ground in Needham and Newton off Route 128, rather than the 150-foot poles used by telecommunications companies.

Moore said he believed the 35-foot height restriction and the zoning board's discretionary powers would be adequate to regulate towers.

His opinion is supported somewhat by the most recent tower, approved by the zoning board last September.

Sprint Spectrum received permission from the zoning board of appeals on Sept. 10 to erect a flagpole-style antenna behind an auto repair business on Route 3A.

Members of the zoning board granted approval for Ken Eaves, the owner of Foreign Auto Repair, to lease land at 149 King St. to Sprint so the company could erect a 123-foot monopole and equipment pad.

Towns cannot prohibit the construction of wireless towers, nor banish towers to undesirable sections of town. Towns must also be careful not to discriminate against some companies over others.

The zoning board had closed the Sprint hearing last June, but reopened it on June 25 because Sprint changed the proposed antenna design from a lattice-style to a flagpole design.

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said Sprint changed the design because of fears that the zoning board was prepared to reject the lattice design.

Zoning board members felt the monopole was just such a significant change in design that it could not be consider without public comment.

DeGiacomo said the zoning board was convinced that Sprint did everything it could to mitigate the adverse effects of the tower.

The zoning board placed several restrictions on the license.

If the tower is not used for 12 consecutive months, Sprint must remove it immediately. No other antennas or attachments may be affixed to the tower. All unregistered cars at Ken's Foreign Auto must be removed as a condition of the permit.

Moore said he is reluctant to start fiddling around with the town's bylaws.

"I get very nervous when things change and we react by running out and changing our bylaws," Moore said. "We could lock ourselves in, because when you have local zoning there are some things you may not be able to override

Moore added that he just doesn't see wireless communications towers as an overwhelming issue for Cohasset.

"Wireless towers in and of themselves are not bad things," Moore said. "The service is getting better all the time and people like that."

But DeGiacomo is more cautious. He is worried that the town will eventually get stuck with an undesirable tower because of the limitations placed on local zoning by the Telecommunications Act.

"Some kind of action is needed," DeGiacomo said. "The best way to do that is by careful planning. Without planning, eventually we could see lower property values."

Moore said he believed residents would step up and get involved when a specific project served to rally public opposition.

"Only when you get a specific incident, as was the case with the water tower, will you get a lot of public input," Moore said. "Then, it may just be a matter of finding the right location and not denying altogether."

Progress report on Cohasset's new middle school

Art teacher John Packard shows Spanish teacher Melissa Barry some student ceramic art created in the Middle School interdisciplinary program.

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

This September, Cohasset educators embarked on an experiment called a middle school. Now, with student report cards due soon, several of the enrichment team teachers at the "new" school decided to check in with their own progress report.

The day of the Middle School's Halloween celebration, French teacher George Fortin took a leaf out of the Peanut characters cartoon strip.

Fortin came to school dressed as the Great Pumpkin. It proved to be a giant step forward for the veteran teacher who said the great reaction he got from the students mystified him.

"I never before had that kind of contact with kids. Never in 32 years of teaching." Fortin said. "It was like a re-birth."

In a sign of the times, Cohasset's junior high school has also undergone something of a re-birth as a middle school. Starting this September, seventh- and eighth-graders here no longer go to classes at "Junior" High or share teachers like Fortin with the high school kids. Now the high school and middle school faculties are completely separate, as are the sports teams and the activities. Indeed, the Middle School boys and girls play sports on their own teams and in their own league now. Moreover, they can tout their own band, chorus, yearbook, and art club..

Welcome to Middle School.

The "little big kids" who used to look up to the seniors at Cohasset High, health instructor Maureen Duffy said, now see the older people less and can choose role models from their own ranks.

As Duffy, Fortin and the team of enrichment teachers took a look back this week at the young school year so far, they offered some views about their progress as middle school educators. Though all said they are pleased so far with the healthy changes the middle school concept has apparently spawned, they indicated they are still exploring the opportunities to be tapped.

> "It's a lot more creativity, a lot more group work, and a lot more time exploring the team concept."
> – JOHN PACKARD, ART TEACHER

For art teacher John Packard, the new school has meant more teaching time, since the youngsters, under the mandates of Education Reform, are expected to be in classes at all times. This year, Packard said, everyone takes a full year of art, and the art teacher has revamped the course to delve into drama, and TV production, as well as the "standard visuals."

Despite the negative of larger class sizes, Packard believes it's a good development overall. More instructional time has also meant more opportunity to link up with other teachers on the team. Putting ideas across to students in an integrated package helps the youngsters make valid connections among the different fields of learning, the teachers agreed.

For instance, Packard said, his class this fall on mass communications took a critical look at the images of women used to sell products in advertisements. Duffy teamed up with Packard to take advantage of his visual know-how to explore the way advertisers try to sell alcohol, and physical education teacher Ronald Ford also weighed in with an anti-smoking project. Ultimately, they hope to start the students producing their own "commercials" by stealing the admen's methods to sell an anti-drug campaign.

"There's more of an emphasis on the whole student," Packard concluded.

Packard and the other enrichment teachers also want parents and the community to know they are welcome to come to school and volunteer.

"A lot of community members stand ready to come into the schools," he said.

The art teacher is looking for people who will commit to one visit a semester or even one a year, whether they have any special art skills or just an interest in the children. People who would like to see the school for themselves and be part of the middle school experiment should call the principal's office at 383-6100.

"It's a lot more creativity, a lot more group work, and a lot more time exploring the team concept," Packard said, summing up the change for the educators. For the students, on the other hand, there's more time spent in class and more emphasis on subjects like art and music which used to be electives. The youngsters are also encouraged to participate in performances and sports.

In the most dramatic change, for the first time this year, the athletics program has instituted a "no-cut" policy, and 105 of the 190 students won a berth on a team.

"Every kid who comes out for a team makes a team," Ford said. "At this level, it's important to have team structures. Kids learn the basic values of being on a team, such as discipline and responsibility."

Finally, the teachers, Fortin said, are learning the benefits of being on a team of educators.

"One of the big things is our built-in extra help," the French teacher said.

Fortin also said the additional homeroom time before lunch has been a positive. "It's a 25-minute period before lunch when the teacher's at his station, and kids can go in for extra help or a consultation.

"The pressure comes off a little bit," Fortin said. "It's the heart of the day."

Sharks put a 'Super' bite on Bridgewater

A wave of blue comes down the stairs as the Scituate/Cohasset Sharks make their way down to the field during the Old Colony Youth Football Super Bowl game played in Kinsgton on Sunday. The Sharks overcame Bridgewater and Mother Nature on their way to a 18-0 victory.

Midget program wins Super Bowl crown 16-0.

By David McKee
STAFF WRITER

Sharks are killing machines in water.

So when Scituate-Cohasset Sharks coach Dan O'Brien saw rain falling on Sunday morning, he knew his team would do well in the Midget Super Bowl against the Bridgewater Badgers.

"We're a great team in bad weather and our players were really pumped up to play the game in the rain," O'Brien said. "We beat Barnstable 34-12 the week before in the rain to reach the Super Bowl so we had a lot of confidence heading into the game."

O'Brien proved to be a prophet as the Sharks rolled to the Midget Super Bowl championship by blanking Bridgewater 16-0 at Silver Lake in Kingston.

For the Sharks (Scituate and Cohasset players age 12-13), it was their first-ever Super Bowl since joining the Old Colony League. It was also the first Super Bowl title won by a Scituate or Cohasset football team since '80.

The Sharks scored both of their touchdowns in the first half and kept the Badgers off the board the rest of the way to complete the shutout.

The first score came on a 25-yard screen pass from Sean Conton to David Butterworth on a third down play. The Sharks had stuffed the Badgers first drive and marched 75 yards to score.

Butterworth then hit Steve McDevitt on the half-back option and the Sharks had an 8-0 lead.

Then after a Badger fumble in the second period, the Sharks punched in their second TD as Butterworth scampered 15 yards. He also ran in the two-point conversion and the Sharks were ahead 16-0.

With a safe 16-point lead, the Sharks turned up the defensive heat on the Badgers. Bridgewater could not get untracked and ended up with the shutout.

"David made some really big plays for us," O'Brien said. "And we showed that we could move the ball on them. But the key for us was the play of our offensive line. They opened the holes and gave us enough time to do what we wanted."

O'Brien said the Sharks domination at the line of scrimmage kept the Badgers from getting untracked, especially in the second half as the rain continued to fall.

"We controlled the ball for about 80 percent of the game and Bridgewater just couldn't stay with us," he said. "

We peaked at the right time and everything came together for us."

On defense, nose guard Chris Komejko led the way with ten unassisted tackles and one fumble recovery.

"He had a huge game for us," O'Brien said. "But our entire defense deserves credit for the shutout."

Linebacker Danny Hughes, linebacker Chris Connelly and tackle Mike Barry all played solid games for the Sharks.

Bridgewater only managed two first downs in the entire game.

The Sharks ended the season with a record of 6-3-1.

Coach O'Brien said the team hit stride midway through the season thanks to a bend-but-never-break defense and a ball control offense.

"We had some early losses and it took a while for us to finally put it all together," he said. "But we went 3-1-1 in our last five games and managed to get into the playoffs. The players really deserve a lot of praise for their play."

From there the Sharks played their two best games as they beat Barnstable and Bridgewater.

The Sharks were the third place team in the Old Colony League.

"We rose to the occasion in the post-season," O'Brien said. "It was a great run for us and shows that this area is quite strong in football talent," O'Brien said. "Most of these guys came up through the Mites and PeeWees and they know what it takes to be successful."

O'Brien is the Sharks head coach with Mike Cronin, Chris Conroy, Mike McDonald and Domenic Laudani.

Skippers fall in second straight shutout

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Despite playing a hard-fought game on a muddy field, drenched by the rains of the weekend, the Cohasset Skippers came up short in their bid to beat the Knights of South Boston.

The visiting Skippers put forth a stellar effort, but were hampered by the absence of several key players and their failure to capitalize on opportunities, and fell by a score of 13-0.

Cohasset dominated most of the first half, as their defense was punishing and their offense, overwhelming. Defensive end Jamie Buick shut down the outside corner to South Boston's runners, and linebacker Adam Sasso played a monster game, along with corner back Andy Hamilton, who did an outstanding job reading and stopping the run.

Throughout the game, the visitors played a gutsy defensive game.

In the second half, despite big plays from John Considine and Sean Parkinson, the Knights managed to squeeze in two scores, although only one was needed.

Their key plays came on passes lofted to receivers running sideline routes, as Cohassset had efficiently stopped the running game for most of the afternoon.

On offense, Cohasset did everything but put the ball in the end zone.

Early on, the Skippers' offensive line dominated the line of scrimmage, and halfback Justin Golden tore through the Southie defenders for eight-yard gains. Most of the first half was played on South Boston's side of the field.

Cohasset marched down inside the red zone and presented itself with scoring opportunities three times, and three times they failed to capitalize.

A fumble on the three-yard line cost them an early chance, and the sloppy conditions prevented quarterback Pat Hurley from finding Buick, his favorite receiver, who would be knocked out of the game late in the second quarter due to a separated shoulder, suffered while diving for a pass in the end zone.

Soccer for moms takes off in big way

Indoor facilities thrive with programs for all ages

By David McKee

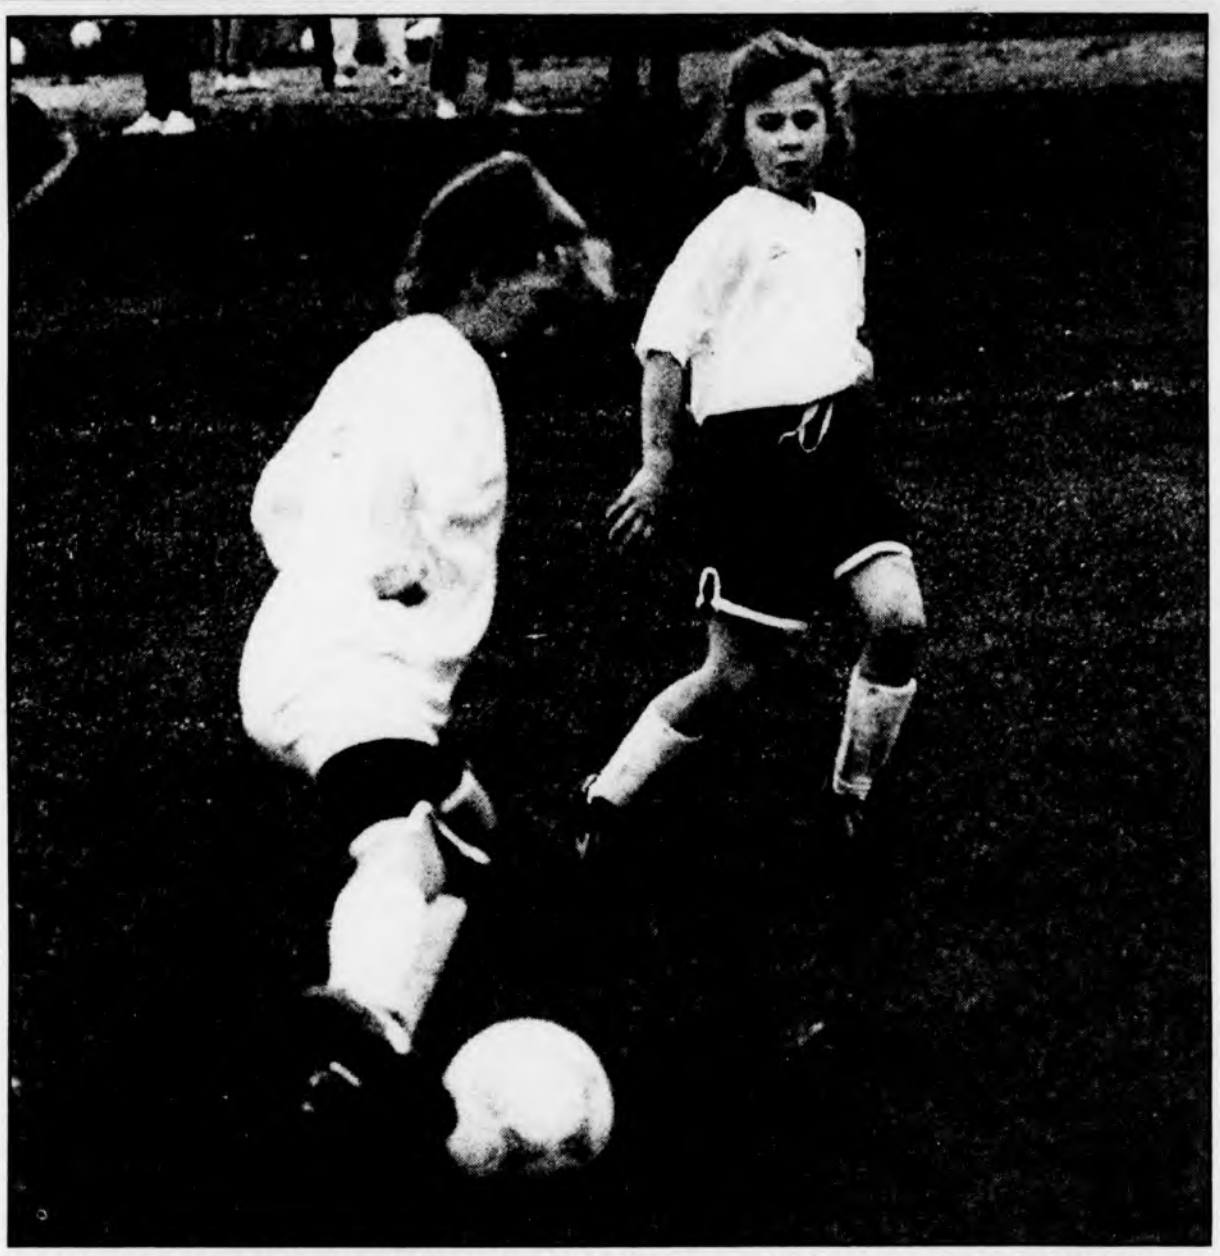
The crossing pass was right on the money.

In one swift motion, the wide-open forward trapped the ball on the kelly green artificial turf and booted it past the helpless goalie into the lower corner of the net for a goal.

Excited teammates showered the high-flying forward with high five's as the crowd let out a hearty cheer.



No, we're not talking about an indoor soccer battle between two U-16 teams, but a game between South Shore mothers who participate in the Soccer For Moms program at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham.

Three mornings a week for the last five years, that hot demographic group known as Soccer Moms, have came down from the sidelines and onto the indoor field in Hingham to take part in the game of soccer. The program, which meets at 9:30 a.m. on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, is a way for moms, most of whom have never played organized soccer, to learn about the game in an active and fun atmosphere.

And while there are more than a few stand-out athletes in the bunch, the majority of the players have come away with a better appreciation for the game and more respect for the effort of their children.

"I won't be screaming from the sidelines anymore, that's for sure," said Quincy's Lisa Sullivan during a time-out at a recent game. "Soccer is a lot tougher when you're out on the field doing it for yourself. Now I know what all those kids are dealing with when they play. But I re-

Nonetheless, Hurley showed poise, standing in the pocket until the last minute to throw the ball. Cohasset's offensive line also did a good job, particularly run blocking on the muddy field at White Stadium.

The fact remains, though, that the Skippers lost the game and lost Buick with a separated shoulder. This Friday, they host undefeated Norwell at Alumni Field, Friday night.

The underdog Skippers, now 1-7, will try to play spoiler to Norwell's Super Bowl bid.

Junior lacrosse program looking for a few good coaches

Thanks to phenomenal growth in popularity and interest, the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse Club is in need of additional coaches for the Spring 1998 season. No lacrosse experience is necessary.

The reason the team can take coaches without experience is the structure of its league, the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Association, the largest youth league in the country. The league allows communities to have more than one entry, and then allows multiple teams to be scheduled so that they always play in the same place — either home or away together — on the same day.

"We have grown to the point where there is a good chance we will want to field two teams this year," said Chuck Jaffe, who runs the junior program in Cohasset. "If we get volunteers with no experience, I can act as head coach for both teams. If we get someone with lacrosse experience, we each can coach one team. We need a helping hand more than we need an experienced hand."

Jaffe explains that the biggest need is for a coach to assist during practices, when the only way to install an offense or defense is in small groups of players. "The rest of the kids should be doing drills or installing the same offense at the other end of the field, but that's not possible without a second or possibly a third coach," he says.

Last year, the Cohasset junior lacrosse team had 30 players, a high number within the Mass Bay youth teams. This year, thanks to a successful summer camp and increased awareness and interest, Jaffe expects closer to 40 children in grades 5 and 6 to sign up. Without at least one additional coach, Jaffe says he might have no choice but to limit the program to a single team of 30 players signed up on a first-come, first-served basis.

With sign-up set for December and the league needing notification of Cohasset's intention to field a second team by January, the program needs to hear from volunteers now. The Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League also holds a winter coaches clinic that volunteers may want to attend.

For this spring, Jaffe plans to practice the junior lacrosse program at or after 4:30 p.m. on Mondays and Fridays. Games are Sunday afternoons. Practice begins as weather permits in march, and the season ends Father's Day weekend in June.

For more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program and becoming a volunteer coach, contact Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0332.

New Year's sports festival jamboree

The South Shore Sports Center will hold it's first New Year's Sports Festival Jamboree the week of Monday, Dec. 29 from noon to 4 p.m. on Rinks 2 and 3.

The Jamboree is a multi sport camp and tournament with skills competitions, games and clinics. Sports include baseball, basketball, flag football, hockey (street/roller), kickball, lacrosse, soccer and volleyball.

The program will be directed by Ted Carroll. Ted has been at the Sports Center since 1985 serving as both the director of basketball and hockey programs.

He has an extensive background in recreation, working with the Cohasset Recreation Department since 1982 and the Hingham Recreation Department since 1994.

Ted will be joined by 7 top sports center and recreation staff members. They will join him providing a unique experience for your child emphasizing teamwork, sportsmanship, fun and learning.

The jamboree is limited to the first 40 boys or girls aged 9 through 12 registered. The program fee is $95. Application and a $30 deposit is required by Monday, Dec. 15.

Once registered, an information sheet and more specific details will be mailed out to parents prior to the program. Individual equipment for some sports will be required.

Registration open for winter games

Registration is now open for the 1998 Bay State Winter games.

The games offer competition in figure skating, masters ice hockey, youth ice hockey (new), alpine skiing, cross country skiing and snowboarding. Shea enjoying the chance of a lifetime

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Dave Shea, the new play-by-play announcer for the Boston Bruins on TV-UPN Channel 38, has a ready made audience in Pembroke, Marshfield and Duxbury, for starters.

The 46-year-old play-caller was raised in Duxbury, currently lives in Pembroke and has a son, Brendan, who is a co-captain on the Marshfield High School football team.

Brendan also has a younger sister, Jillian, who attends Marshfield High School. Both youngsters are from Dave's previous marriage.

Shea currently lives in Pembroke, with his wife, Pamela, and their three children, Chris, 9, Tim and the youngest, Dan, 2.

Dave and Pam celebrated their 10th anniversary Aug. 15, the same day it was announced that Dave would be the new Bruins play-by-play announcer, replacing the venerable Fred Cusick.

When it comes to Cusick, "replace" is really not the right word to use.

"You don't replace a Cusick, you just succeed him in that position," said Shea. "You just don't replace people like Cusick, Bob Wilson, Johnny Most, Curt Gowdy and all the other announcing greats. You just try to be the best that you can."

As for his new job, the former three-sport captain at Duxbury High stated, "There's no denying this is a plum job. I only wish I could have got to this point a little easier than I did."

Shea, who in the past worked the booth with Cusick and former Bruins star Derek Sanderson, was surprisingly passed over for the lead announcing job on NESN a few years ago in favor of sports radio personality Dale Arnold.

Shea graduated Duxbury High in 1969, and got his first radio announcing job in 1974 on WCSS in Amsterdam, N.Y. He would do play-by-play announcing of high school games, but there was a catch. He also had to be a disc jockey six nights a week.

"I abhorred that disc jockey job," said Shea. "However, I did get to do sports, and it gave me a chance to develop a style."

Shea returned to Boston in August of 1975, where he continued to gain experience in announcing games.

Said Shea, "My real break came in the late '70s. The Bruins were heading to Atlanta to play the Flames. At that time, Johnny Pierson was Cusick's TV color commentator. Johnny had to be in Montreal to attend a funeral and Cusick's throat was a little sore. I was asked if I would like to assist Cusick and let me tell you, I gave it a lot of thought.

"I didn't want to go on and embarrass myself," Shea remembered. "Finally, I decided to do it, since it was March and the game was in Atlanta and it didn't mean anything. What I didn't figure on was that would be the day Bruins general manager Harry Sinden would fire the head coach Fred Creighton, and Sinden would take over the coaching duties.

"Now, instead of having just a ho-hum game, we had a major game, since folks back home would want to see just what Sinden could do with the team. I guess I did OK."

He continued, "It was in 1982 that I began to fill in for Pierson on a more permanent basis. Johnny had a furniture business and was devoting more time to it. Now, I played three sports, football, baseball and basketball. I had to take some crash courses on the sport of hockey to know what I was talking about."

By 1985, Pierson was spending more time with his company, so he gave up the color job, and Channel 38 needed someone new. Enter Shea.

"I really didn't want to do color. I was told it would only be a couple of years until Fred retired, but no one told Fred that." said Shea. "Derek Sanderson came upon the scene and became the color man, and I joined NESN as the third man in the booth.

"I got plenty of work doing college hockey and Harvard football, along with a number of other sports, while waiting for this big opportunity to come."

Shea will now be doing the play-by-play, while another South Shore resident, Andy Brickley of Hingham, will be doing the color.

As for the Bruins themselves, Shea sees a great season coming up. "We have a new look in the booth, and the team itself has a new look with so many rookies joining the team.

"The timing is perfect. The team is going through a face lift and through a new era, such as the Orr era and the Bourque era. Now the Bruins have Joe Thornton plus a number of other great looking prospects.

"I think this team will make the playoffs. It's fast, skilled and has a great defensive attitude."

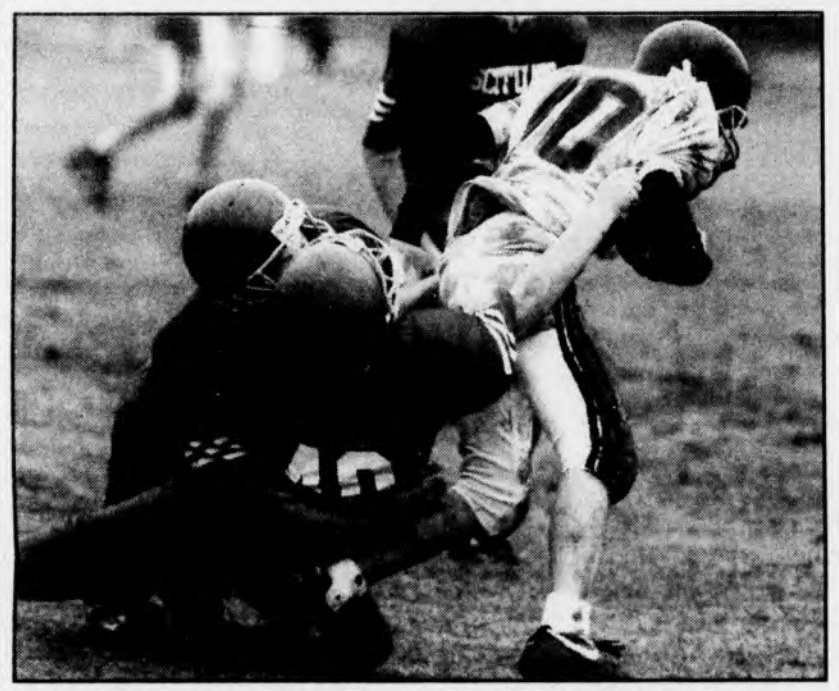
Basketball program needs your help



The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.

Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years.

Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away. Basketball registration for boys and girls grades 1-8, is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 15, 9 a.m.-11 a.m., Town Hall.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

David Butterworth and Chris Connelly combine to make sure that the Bridgewater carrier gets nowhere.

Soccer for moms takes off in big way

ally enjoy getting out here. It's great exercise and you make a lot of friends."

Sullivan, in her second year playing, was up early one Monday in Sept. with more than a dozen other women from all age ranges taking part in a spirited soccer game as their children cheered from the stands. (The Soccer for Moms program welcomes children to the games and there is ample space for them to safely watch their mothers rip it up on the field.)

"I have a blast out here," said Hanover's Nancy McAlister, who brought along her daughter Mary to a recent game. "This is a great facility and the games are pretty intense. I think people would be surprised with the quality of play."

Indeed the moms have quickly adapted to the fast-break, high-intensity, indoor game. And with the fast field, wooden boards and open space of the field in Hingham, the games are feature many goals, skillful passes and great positional defense.

The program is also a great way to make new friends. During warm-ups, after the game and during breaks in the action, teammates and opposing players show no hesitation in striking up conversations.

"The moms are pretty serious about their soccer," said Dave Pike, soccer director at the South Shore Sports Center. "They don't just kick the ball and run around. But it isn't a Gung-ho league where players are all over each other. There's enough space to move around and the moms are very creative with their passes and use the whole field."

Pike said the program began five years ago as a way for mothers to stay in shape.

"Some women approached me about using the field a couple times a week because they were getting tired of aerobics at their gym," he said. "And it just took off from there. Soccer is a great way to get some exercise and because of the team aspect, there's more social interaction than going to the gym and working out with your headphones on."

There are no sign-ups for the program. Simply show up at the allotted time, bring $3 and you're in. This relaxed registration approach is appreciated by the mothers. Many have jobs or young kids in school and can't make a long-term, financial commitment to a health club because their time is so short.

"Mothers are so busy these days and having an informal program like this is the right way to go," Pike said. "You simply show up when you can make it. And no matter how many end up here, there's always enough for a game."

The South Shore Sports Center, located on Route 53, has been in operation for 15 years and is one of the oldest and most popular indoor sports facilities in Eastern Mass. The facility used to be the Old Colony Tennis club before it converted into an indoor soccer club. There are also two full-court basketball courts and an in-line skating rink at South Shore.

The 185' x 85' soccer field is used seven days a week, year-round and hosts more than 80 soccer games per week involving players from age five to 40-plus. Everyone from youth to club, elite, and adult leagues can be found working out at Hingham. There are also numerous camps and clinics. The Soccer for Moms program is one of the more popular offered at the facility.

The Hingham facility has grown in popularity along with the game of soccer over the last decade.

"Being in the northeast and with the weather-factor, there is really a need for a place like this," Pike said. "There just aren't a lot of town fields to play on when the weather gets bad and soccer is a year-round sport these days. We're just here to fill a need."

> "Some women approached me about using the field a couple times a week because they were getting tired of aerobics at their gym."
> DAVE PIKE

Pike said indoor soccer is more fast-paced than the outdoor game.

"With the boards and the smaller field, there is more scoring and offense," he said. "You don't have throw-ins and corner kicks, you just keep playing and that helps you with developing your skill level."

While Hingham's indoor soccer facility has been operational for the last 15 years, the Bridgewater Sports Dome has been in business the last four years.

Under the name of the John Smith Soccer Center, the facility, located on Route 28 near Bridgewater State College, offers two full-size indoor soccer facilities.

There is also a full-sized little league field, a softball field, a volleyball court and several basketball courts. More than 100 games are played each week in Bridgewater with 2,000-plus players ages five to plus-40. Like Hingham, there are various leagues, select teams, camps, clinics and adult leagues. The dome is open seven days per week.

"Soccer is the main draw of our facility and business has gone really well," said Bridgewater soccer director Peter DeFusco. "We have a lot of people of all ages coming in and out of here. But we have really seen the growth in the youth leagues. More kids play the game than they did even five years ago."

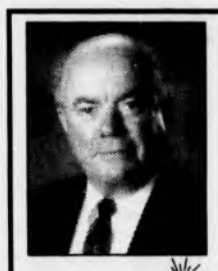
DeFusco, who is the varsity boys soccer coach of Durfee High, agreed that soccer is now a year-round sport in New England.

"We're full capacity pretty-much the whole year," he said. "And when kids are playing year-round, they are developing better decision making and more soccer skills."

While the facilities in Hingham and Bridgewater are the anchors of indoor soccer in southeastern Mass., The Plymouth Sports Dome, an inflatable bubble facility, is in the process of opening on Natale Way. Its outdoor facilities, which include numerous soccer fields has been operational for the past year.

The 300' by 180' domed field will have a 50' high, inflated bubble roof, as well as artificial turf and boards.

Facility director, Jeff Doyle, is hoping to have the bubble in place by the middle of September.



"There is a definite market for a facility like this in Plymouth," Doyle said. "Hingham and Bridgewater have been around for a while, but the Plymouth area and the Cape have a great interest in soccer as well and we're hoping our facility will really take off."

Doyle knows a little something about soccer. He was a member of the '88 Silver Lake Division I state champion soccer team before winning an NCAA title at New Hampshire College and going on to play for the Cape Cod Crusaders, a third-division professional soccer team based in the Dennis-Yarmouth area, for the last two years.

"The more soccer you play, the better you become," Doyle said. "And the days of playing only three or four months in a year are over. Soccer is extremely popular, especially with the young players, and having a dome nearby will allow them to play even more. We wouldn't have gone into this if we didn't think there was a need."

The Plymouth dome will offer its space to players of all ages. In fact, they welcomed members of the New England Revolution for a free clinic on Sept. 13 to introduce more people to their operation.

"We're very excited about opening our dome," Doyle said. "Having more places for kids to play will only help the game keep growing."

Cohasset scenes included in photographer's new book

Book signing tonight at Buttonwood Books

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Passing through Cohasset, the town's pristine village scenery catches the eye. Through his camera's lens, Scituate photographer Len Rubenstein has captured the classic beauty of the First Parish Meeting House on the town common and the estuary at low tide - both of which appear in his new book, "The Most Beautiful Villages in New England."

"Cohasset is easily as pretty as any of the other towns in the book," Rubenstein said at his Ocean Avenue studio.

Rubenstein will speak about his new book - which has been released worldwide - and present a travelogue slide show during a book signing at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset tonight, Nov. 13, from 7 to 9 p.m.

A commercial photographer specializing in environmental portraits for several corporations' annual reports, Rubenstein photographed the 25 New England villages in the book off and on for the past three years. Cohasset, which Rubenstein added to the publisher's list of towns, joins some of the most photogenic spots in Massachusetts - including Nantucket, Cuttyhunk, Lexington and Concord - as well as the other four New England states on more than 200 vivid color pages.

A native of the Bronx, Rubenstein has made his home for the past six years in the seaside village known as Minot. He had also wanted to include Minot in the new book, but the publisher had already selected the villages that would be featured in the book and could not add another on top of Cohasset.

"No matter where I traveled, I couldn't wait to get back here," he said. "Minot is a gem."

Out shooting photographs for about 200 days a year, Rubenstein's profession has enabled him to travel all over the world, where he has shot everything from open-heart surgery to Nobel Prize winners. During the month of October alone, Rubenstein worked in Italy, China, Japan and Sweden shooting photographs for annual reports.

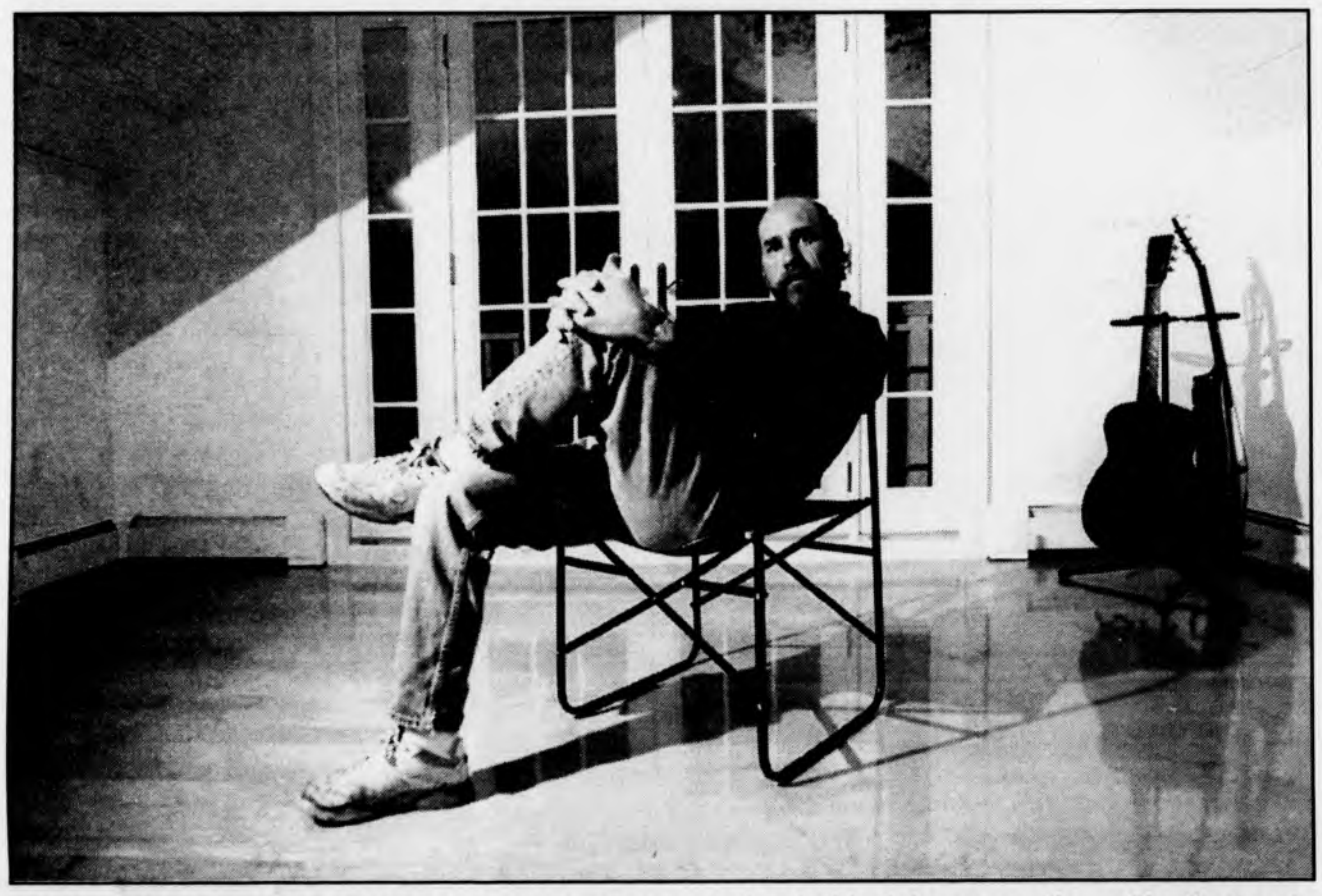
"What I love is to get on a plane and go somewhere and be shooting something different every day," he said. "My job has allowed me to be in such amazing places."

Since he became a professional photographer about 20 years ago, Rubenstein's portfolio has grown to include such national and international clients as AEtna, Disney, Fidelity Investments, Fuji, Lotus, Merrill Lynch and Reebok. Rubenstein tries to balance his work between board rooms and the social work and health industries, he said.

But shooting photographs for a "coffee table book about towns and places" - the first one he's ever done - always appealed to him.

While out in the New England villages taking pictures for the book, Rubenstein encountered one obstacle: he had to stifle his inclination toward photographing people and focus more on the historic buildings and picturesque landscapes in each village.

"In most coffee table books about towns and places, people want to see what a place looks like with the people secondary," he said. "I'm not saying one way is wrong or right, but taking pictures of people is what I like."



Rubenstein said he would rather photograph a baseball field with children playing a game than early morning mist rising from the trodden earth of the field.

"I'm looking for the pulse of a place or the people I meet," he explained.

Many of the photographs in "The Most Beautiful Villages in New England" feature townspeople in their natural environments, including a full-page spread of Cohasset people in the "Patriotic Festivals" section of the book. Cohasset also graces both the front and back covers of the book.

"Cohasset really got in here. They're all over the place," he noted. "I think the book came out really nice."

Although his business - which he started on his own nine years ago - keeps him occupied most of the year, Rubenstein has also been published in a series of children's science education books called "Real Kids, Real Science Books."

Local photographer Len Rubenstein, shown here relaxing in his Scituate studio, will talk about his new book, "The Most Beautiful Villages in New England," at a book signing tonight at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset.

Festival clambake supports carousel

Winter may be around the corner but it was summer all over again Sunday night at the Paragon Carousel. Almost 200 guests tasted clam chowder, lobster bisque and shrimp as they took one last spin on the Carousel. After listening to familiar tunes from the home-grown singing group "Boat to Boston" the revelers crossed the street to feast on a lobster clambake at Jake's Seafood Restaurant.

Susan Jaffe, chairman of the Clambake Committee remarked: "The Carousel proved to be a wonderful place for a cocktail party. At one point in the evening, all 66 horses and both chariots were filled with guests enjoying one last go 'round." Jaffe was assisted by committee members, Andrea Kinnealey and Mal McCunney of Cohasset, Robin Pellesier of Hingham and Linda Berkeley of Hull.

The highlight of the evening was the drawing for the raffle of a Caribbean cruise for two donated by Princess Cruises, Lido Travel of Cohasset and Midway Airlines. The very happy winner was Blake Haskell, newly arrived in Hull and newly married.

All proceeds from the dinner and raffle will go to continue the effort to keep the Carousel in Hull.

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

The holidays are rapidly approaching, it seems as if there isn't enough time to do half of the things that need doing. Some things can be put on hold or temporarily forgotten, but appetites aren't one of those things. Today I thought that I would share with you a couple of ideas for "holding them over" while the late dinner is being prepared. Actually, some prefer these to an actual meal, and they can be made ahead

The first idea is for stuffed mushrooms, and I write this for two special gals who "love 'em", Tricia and Rose!

BAKED STUFFED MUSHROOMS

1 1/2 pounds fresh mushrooms
1 can (6 1/2 ounces) crab meat, drained dry homemade bread crumbs
1 stick butter
2 tablespoons chopped onion

Wipe mushrooms. Remove stems and chop finely; melt butter in pan, then add the mushroom stems, crab meat and onion. SautÈ until mushroom stems are soft, about ten minutes, then add the bread crumbs until you get the desired consistency for stuffing. Fill mushrooms; place in greased pan or cookie sheet, bake at 350 degrees for 20 to 25 minutes (til mushrooms are hot and cooked, still firm.

* Deviled ham or minced clams may be used instead of the crab meat if desired.

Here is another quick and easy "pick-me-up" crab meat canapÈs. They are easy to make, a "do-ahead dream", and everyone gobbles them up (timely saying, isn't it)!

CRAB MEAT CANAP...S

1 jar Old English Cheese
1 teaspoon Lawry's salt
1 teaspoon garlic powder
1 stick butter, softened
1 tablespoon mayonnaise
1 can crab meat, drained
3 English muffins

Mix cheese, salt, garlic powder, butter and mayonnaise. Fold in crab meat, spread on 6 English muffin halves. Place on a cookie sheet and cover with foil or plastic wrap. Freeze. When ready to use, cut each muffin into quarters while frozen, place under broiler until bubbly and brown.

Yields 24

Do you have a favorite recipe, one that everyone requests whenever you serve it? We would love you to share it with us!

ASP can help you celebrate

The holiday season is fast upon us. The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project can help lighten your load! For Thanksgiving, they're once again selling pies (pecan, apple and pumpkin) and breads (cranberry and pumpkin). Watch the mail for a town-wide mailing which will include order forms.

For Christmas, there are three wonderful possibilities:

First, included in the town-wide mailing will also be the ASP-1998 stock forms where individuals can buy "stock" in their home repair work-camp trip early next summer. Purchasing stock will carry several "benefits" and would make a wonderful Christmas/Hanukkah gift for that loved one "who has everything."

Secondly, they will again sponsor Santa's visit to the Common at the Village Fair Saturday, Dec. 6, from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Also, back will be the "Secret Room," (first floor, St. Stephen's Church), open from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., where children can "secretly" purchase and wrap inexpensive gift items for their parents with one-on-one assistance from teenage volunteers. And then, the third option will be the annual Chamber auction that same evening, Dec. 6, beginning at 6:30 p.m., with a special free dinner. Cohasset ASP is one of three beneficiaries of this timely event (Harborfest and VFW).

With more than 75 teenage registrants this year, they need everyone's help in making the $40,000 budget for 1998! So help yourselves and help them - Shop ASP!

Year-end tax preparation

By Amy K. Barrett
Worth Magazine

'Tis the season to plan for your 1997 tax return. Of course, you can wait until the April 15 deadline, or even extend the process to October 1998, before actually filing your tax return. But certain steps need to be taken before the end of this year if they are to help lower your taxable income for 1997.

After all, the government gives you opportunities—deductions and credits to help trim your taxable income. So why not make sure to plan ahead and take advantage of them?

Capital gains and losses, retirement plans like a Keogh account, and even medical expenses need to be realized, or made, before the end of the year if they are going to count toward this year's returns. But this is not simply an annual wake-up call for taxpayers. New changes in tax laws this year may mean that it's time to revise any year-end tax strategies you already have.

Here are a few tips that accountants Eric Lawrence of Gelman, Rosenberg and Freedman; Ron Shalhoub of Shalhoub & Shalhoub and lawyer Norman Gold offer for year-end planning:

CAPITAL GAINS. The biggest impact of this year's tax law changes under the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 may be for capital gains. Every year taxpayers who invest in securities such as stocks and bonds have to decide whether they should sell securities at a loss to offset the taxes they will have to pay on securities they sold for a profit.

But because the capital gains rates have changed, you should make sure that you are balancing capital gains and losses wisely, says Norman Gold, the tax lawyer in New York. The question may not be which losses to take, but which profits to enjoy.

If, for example, you sold shares at a loss this year, it might not be a smart choice to sell profitable shares you have owned for a long time. From a tax point of view, this wouldn't make the best combination for offsetting gains and losses on your tax return. You lose out on potential savings.

Why? Congress has made it more appealing to hold on to securities for a long period of time. This year, capital gains rates are three-tiered, with rates increasing as the length of time you hold the securities decreases.

Here is the breakdown: Any profitable investments sold after May 6, 1997 and before July 29, 1997 will be taxed at 20 percent (provided they were held for 12 months), instead of the previous top rate of 28 percent. Investments sold after July 29 must have been held for at least 18 months to enjoy the reduced rate.

On the other hand, if you sell after July 29, and you have owned the securities for more than a year but less than 18 months, you are taxed at the old 28 percent rate. And, as usual, any gains realized in less than a year are taxed as income.

The name of the game at the end of the year is to use investment losses to offset your highest taxes. Under tax rules, investors can reduce the amount they owe in taxes by offsetting their most highly taxed capital gains with any net losses incurred in that year. And, what's more, if they do not realize any investment profits, they can deduct as much as $3,000 in losses against their taxable income (salary, dividend payments, etc.), which is usually taxed at a much higher rate than capital gains.

If your income tax is above the capital gains rate (as most investors' are) you would get the biggest tax benefit by deducting the loss from the income versus the capital gains.

DEDUCTIBLE EXPENSES. It is time to tally them up, because if your expenses are short of the minimum required for deduction, you may be able to remedy that by the end of the year.

Certain unreimbursed business expenses, such as the costs of job hunting, publications, union and professional dues, plus tax preparation costs can only be deducted if their totals account for a certain percentage of your income. Medical expenses, for example, must account for 7.5 percent of what you have earned, while the other business and tax costs fall under the miscellaneous category and must total 2 percent of your income.

If you figure that you may not hit the percentage mark, Eric Lawrence, an accountant in Maryland, suggests you pre-pay during this year for services and products that you know you will use next year. Sure, that will chip away at next year's miscellaneous expenses but, as Gold points out, "it's better to lose one year of deductions than both."

SELF-EMPLOYMENT. Being your own boss may give you the autonomy that you want, but it comes with the price tag of added responsibility. Take your retirement plan. Self-employed people can set up their own retirement accounts — SIMPLEs, SEPs, and Keoghs, which function as substitutes for the corporate 401(k). But they must be set up before the end of the year in order for the user to deduct her contribution.

With a Keogh plan, for example, if you open an account with a small amount of money by the end of the year, you can continue to add money to the account up until the time you file your tax returns next year, says Gold. That means if you delay filing your taxes until October 1998 you can continue to add money that will count toward your 1997 yearly limit.

In fact, Gold encourages everyone, not just the self-employed, to contribute up to the yearly limit for retirement accounts.

Another tip for the self-employed: Pay your estimated state and local taxes before the end of the year. The Internal Revenue Service's deadline for the payment is not until January 15, but if you wait until then you will not be able to deduct the taxes from your federal income tax returns.

Planning for your taxes often simply requires thinking ahead. The best thing to do is to get an accurate picture of where you stand: Go through receipts to discover the amount of deductible expenses you have and put together an inventory of capital gains and losses.

It may take a little elbow grease, and perhaps a knowledgeable accountant to explain the sometimes confusing rules, but making it a New Year's resolution means you've waited too long.

Progressive dinner kicks off year of CEF fund-raising

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Education Foundation (CEF) held its first major fundraising event Saturday, Oct. [illegible], kicking off 1997-98 with a sold out progressive dinner and silent auction, benefiting the high school language lab, the New Laser Disk Instructional Assistance Technology and Equipment project, and Enrichment Programs at the Osgood, Deer Hill, and Cohasset High schools.

Hosting the successful Oct. 25 event to 200 ticket holders were CEF board members Michael Hurley and his wife, Victoria, of Border Street; Andrea Wade and her husband, Roger, of Nichols Road; and Midge Stone and her husband, Peter, of Black Horse Lane.

Although weather that day remained cold and rainy into the evening, it failed to dampen the spirits of enthusiastic dinner party goers who progressed from home to home in an efficiently managed school bus arranged for between the school superintendent's office and CEF. The crowd enjoyed a fun and palate-pleasing presentation of hot and cold hors d'oeuvres, an elegant autumn dinner by candlelight, and a sumptuous array of desserts at the three Cohasset homes.

Tickets for the progressive dinner were sold by CEF board members as well as from a public invitation published consecutively in the Cohasset Mariner the two weeks prior to the event.

The CEF wishes to thank local businesses and individuals who kindly assisted in making this fundraising evening successful, including Jane Kyricos, Reed's Flowers, Hassan Signs, Polly Logan, Gary Ritts, Cohasset Plaza Liquors, Carol McManus of the Borrowed Butler, Steve Hart and his trusty band of bus drivers, Cohasset Lighthouse Keepers Corp., the Grateful Dads, Bill Trifone, Eileen Patterson, Robert and Sharon Moody, the American Seasons Caterers, and Jean Replogle.

The Cohasset Education Foundation, created in 1992, supports and promotes academic initiative and excellence in Cohasset public schools. The volunteer Board of Directors, which reflects the diversity of Cohasset, undertakes fundraising projects outside the tax-based annual school budget that enrich the public education programs and instruction.

An example of town schools' educational excellence was in the recent newsletter published by the Cohasset Schools Committee and mailed to town residents, reporting the 65 percent of Cohasset third graders who participated in the Iowa Testing Program who read at or above their grade level, the "National Norm" being 50 percent.

Cohasset school projects planned for the 1997-98 year include a multicultural Social Studies and Literature Program at the Joseph Osgood School and participation in "Voyage of the Spray," an Educational Circumnavigational Program for all schools.

Future Cohasset Education Foundation fundraising events scheduled in 1997-98 are the annual Winter Spelling Bee and International Trip Raffle, and a CEF Golf Tournament.

For information about the CEF or to make a donation, please call Michael Hurley, President of CEF, at 383-9509 or Andrea Wade, Treasurer of CEF, at 383-1375.

Peter Stone, Greg O'Brien and Bill Earon chat during the progressive dinner and silent auction sponsored by the Cohasset Education Foundation.

In his 23 years with H.P. Hood, Rick Strong has jump started 121 cars, helped find 58 sets of lost keys and delivered 441,000 gallons of milk.

It's all in a days work. Whoever said 'chivalry is gone', didn't get Hood Home Service. Because at Hood, our customers become our friends, and chivalry means plain, old- fashioned 'good will.'

If we can help start our customers' day off right, we do. One way is to make sure all of your favorites, from hearty breakfast foods to light bed-time snacks are always on hand. (And if the old wheels need a jump to get going, we'll be happy to help you there, too.) Need information when placing your order? Just ask! On the way out with the kids in the car... and can't find the keys? We can help. Work outside of the house during the day? Count on your accurate order waiting for you when you get home. And, if we come across the keys, we'll be sure you get those too.

One of the best reasons to be a Hood Home Service customer (besides convenience and help) is our expanded product line. Hood is much more than milk, juice, and bread!

Home delivery is: choice-cut steaks, tasty frozen dinner-time meals, fresh bakery products, delicious desserts, snacks, and household supplies. Plus - we carry brand names favorites such as the original Coca Cola, Starbucks Coffee and healthy Lean Cuisine.

As a valued Hood Home Service customer, placing your order gets easier every week. Just ask Rick Strong. He'll know your needs and be ready to help.

Cohasset man charged with bilking senior citizen out of $28,000

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

A tip from a concerned family member of a 94-year-old Scituate woman led to the arrest of a Cohasset man charged with bilking the senior citizen out of more than $28,000.

Cohasset police arrested Edward M. Fitgerald, 49, of 135 Nichols Road Monday, on charges larceny of more than $250 from an elderly person. Fitzgerald was being held without bail and was due in Hingham District Court yesterday for a bail hearing, police said. The charge carries with it a 10-year state prison sentence, said Det. Sgt. W. Michael Stewart of the Scituate Police.

Stewart led the investigation of Fitzgerald who allegedly used his past relationship with one of the woman's deceased family members to talk her into giving him money. Stewart said a financial investigation showed that Fitzgerald used a whole host of false stories to talk the woman into giving him more than $28,000 over the last year, and police expect that figure to go up by the time the case is wrapped up.

Stewart said Fitzgerald, who has been renting a room in Cohasset for about three years, began soliciting money from the Scituate resident four years ago.

Stewart said Fitzgerald told the woman he was having some financial troubles and asked for tuition money for his son so he would not have to withdraw from Boston College High School. A call to the school confirmed that at no time was Fitzgerald's son enrolled at the private Catholic high school. Fitzgerald also allegedly told the woman that he had cancer and needed money to pay for radiation treatments. This too was false, Stewart said. Relocating his family from Ohio to Massachusetts was another reason Fitzgerald allegedly told the woman he needed money. According to Stewart, Fitzgerald never lived in Ohio.

Also involved in the on-going investigation is the state Department of Elder Affairs and the district attorney's office, Stewart said.

According to Stewart, there is no evidence that anyone else has been victimized by Fitzgerald.

"If anyone else has been, obviously we'd like them to come forward," Stewart said.

POLICE BRIEFS

Nineteen arrests in October

Cohasset police made 19 arrests last month. Charges included: one for possession of a Class B controlled substance; two for possession of Class D (marijuana); two for operating under the influence of alcohol; two for domestic assault and battery; two for causing an affray and disorderly; two for operating a motor vehicle after license revocation; four for minors transporting alcohol; and two for outstanding warrants. Two people were also taken into protective custody during October.

There were no incidents of breaking and entering reported.

The emergency dispatch center logged a total of 111 emergency 911 calls last month, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Fall in-service training

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the department's fall in-service training program got underway in October and runs through May 1998. Each officer is required to spend one week a the Criminal Justice Training Center in Plymouth. Some of the training received involves recent changes in the law, Supreme Court decisions, handling domestic violence, and administering first aid and CPR.

Police grants are awarded

The state Executive Office of Public Safety awarded Cohasset police a $12,081 DARE grant last month which will be used for PALS (Police Assisting Local Schools), a joint drug resistance education program between Cohasset police and schools.

The EOPS also awarded Cohasset police $11,000 in a community policing grant which will be used to beef up bike patrols and institute marine patrols, Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Cohassetopoly puts local twist on popular board game

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Devon Coleman who drew the artwork used for Cohassetopoly holds up one of the popular new games.

The game used to be all about building an empire of hotels on stylish avenues like Boardwalk and Park Place.

But things are different in Cohassetopoly. There are no flophouses on Baltic Avenue to avoid and no grim struggle to stay out of the poorhouse on the wrong side of the tracks. Moreover, instead of going to jail, players get court with representation from lawyer Richard Henderson.

Though it's a mouthful to say, the local version of the big board game has been well received here and gathered a small following during the first week it has been for sale.

For instance, Christine Lovallo had her game face on Tuesday morning when she was home from school for the Veteran's Day holiday.

Also an avid Monopoly player, the 10-year old was about to break out the dice and match wits against friends Lauren Strazzulla, 8, and sisters Brittany and Devon Coleman, 10 and 13, in a challenging match that could be decided in 10 minutes or could take "five days," the youngsters agreed. According to Lovallo, the rules are a bit different than in the Parker Brothers game which was based on the streets of Atlantic City, New Jersey.

But instead of streets, the Cohasset game board features businesses, and the object of the game is to buy stores and build a clientele, not pick up high-rent real estate and build hotels.

"I like buying the businesses," she said. "That's the only time you can own a store in this town."

For Lovallo, who likes dealing in pre-arranged trades when she plays with her brother, Cohassetopoly provides extra incentive for kids to play creatively and by their own rules. Lovallo particularly enjoys owning the toy store block, while her brother likes the baseball card store. (The two have an informal agreement not to obstruct the other's business plan once the game gets going.)

Though the whole experience was new for the Coleman sisters who do not play Monopoly either, nonetheless Devon was the artist whose graceful pen and ink of the Town Common illustrates the center of the game board.

Coleman, who worked with Maura Ditmar on the perspective, said the sketch went through several hundred copies before she was satisfied.

"The first thing we did was take pictures," Coleman said. "Then we cut them up and rearranged them so we could get everything in perspective."

Also, an Ann Pompeo photograph of a harbor-side garden of irises nd lavender which Community Garden Club'c hasset planted outside the L keeper's House is featured on ... cover of the box.

The outcome, according to Peggy Lovallo of the Commuity Garden Club, is a "nice keepsake."

She also said they are selling like hotcakes.

Only about 750 Cohassetopoly game boxes were manufactured — (the game was a fundraising project undertaken by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset's Junior Division) — and 200 are already gone, according to garden club President Vivien Bobo. She does not expect the supply of games to last until Christmas, she said.

"It's a beautiful production," Bobo said. "The board members were very impressed, and the club members are going to be thrilled."

The $20 proceeds from the sales are earmarked for the garden club's scholarship fund, and the club president gave the credit to Peggy Lovallo who got the project rolling after her older daughter Julia, 14, saw an item in the newspaper. The story described how the Stoughton Junior Achievers raised money by selling a similar board game dubbed Stoughtonopoly.

Mr. Lobster Lab keeps project afloat

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

In the political storm over the "Lobster Lab," MIT-trained scientist Kevin Ulmer has proved unsinkable, bringing the question before voters at town meeting twice (and winning twice) over objections from the selectmen. (They preferred to see the research and learning laboratory planted someplace other than the abandoned Hagerty House harborside .)

Ulmer has survived scrutiny and more than a molecule of scoffing in his bid to save the house for the Lobster Lab. What makes this scrappy scientist so tenacious about a research plant on lobsters? In an interview last week with the Mariner, the scientist grappled with some of the questions about why the Lobster Lab has turned into something of a quest.

When a white lobster turned up last week in a catch off the coast of Maine, the find made the local news though it didn't impress Kevin Ulmer.

Lobsters come in all kinds of mutations, according to Ulmer who has studied most all the creatures of the deep at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute.

Kevin Ulmer stands on the steps of the Hagerty House which he hopes to turn into a Lobster Lab.

Landfill admits to dumping violation

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Officials from the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) admitted at Tuesday's health board meeting to placing refuse in an unpermitted area of the property.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik and John K. McNabb Jr. both confirmed that CHL-owner Paul Barry admitted he had placed refuse in an area that is beyond the legal boundaries of the landfill.

Godzik said that Barry admitted CHL had placed the landfill liner beyond the boundary of Area IV and filled to the edge of the liner.

The health board took no action on the matter. SAFE has reported the violation to the Department of Environmental Protection and building inspector Bob Egan.

Egan and DEP are investigating. Egan sent a letter to SAFE saying that he was investigating whether CHL dumped refuse in the unpermitted area or cover material, basically dirt.

But McNabb pointed out that even dirt would be part of the landfill and a form of illegal dumping.

News of the illegal filling came to light last week when members of Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) accused CHL of illegally dumping refuse in an unpermitted area.

The illegal land-filling violates town bylaws and state solid waste laws.

CHL owner Paul Barry could not be

Citizen of Year nominations open

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored the Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for his work with the Appalachia Service Project, an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1997 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Wednesday, Dec. 31. Please see the nomination form on page 23.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1997 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1998.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy for a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the fifth person honored as Citizen of the Year, joining past year recipients:

COHASSET'S WEEK

Private ways signs is topic

Selectmen are considering adding "private way" signs to all the private ways in town so that potential homeowners know that the street is not a public way and therefore does not get the same degree of town services. The cost for 81 signs and brackets would be about $2,500, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Selectmen asked the matter be sent to the private ways committee for its input.

The private ways committee is also on the Dec. 8 selectmen's agenda.

New bids to raze old fire station

As selectmen requested last week, Town Manager Mark Haddad asked the three vendors who submitted bids to raze the old North Cohasset fire station to resubmit their bids.

Two did and the project was awarded to low bidder, Laugelle & Sons at $6,500. Last week Peter Davis of Rosano Davis said it was unfair that two more bids were submitted after his company's $8,500 bid was announced during a televised selectmen's meeting. Selectmen agreed that it was unfair and asked Haddad to seek new bids for the project. Rosano Davis' new bid was $6,875.

Liquor stores open on Sundays

Package stores in town will be allowed to stay open from noon to 8 p.m. on Sundays during the holiday season starting Nov. 23, selectmen said this week.

State law permits the stores to remain open until 11 p.m. or 11:30 on Dec. 24 & 31, subject to the approval of the local licensing authority. Package stores preferring the later closing time, should notify the selectmen's office.

In accordance with the statute, no employee is required to work those days and those who do must be paid not less than 1-1/2 times their wage rate.

Santa's visit approved

Santa Claus will be able to arrive on the town common as usual for the Dec. 8 town fair.

Selectmen approved the highly anticipated visit this week. Santa will be in town from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. that day.

Prorated stickers at RTF

People who buy RTF stickers after the first quarter of the fiscal year will not have to pay the full amount, selectmen said this week. The $65 cost will be prorated on a quarterly basis. They stressed that "seasonal stickers" are not available.

Volunteers sought for private ways, village task force

Volunteers are needed to serve on the private ways and village task force committees. Interested citizens should call Town Manager Mark Haddad 383-9900 or stop by the selectmen's office on the second floor of town hall.

The Gold Coast has a rich history

One of many spectacular Cohasset homes along the Gold Coast.

Doug McFadd photo

by David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset is generally viewed by non-residents as an upscale community with high property values. And property values in town are high enough to support that perception.

But there is one section of town that is especially upscale: the Gold Coast, made up of about 150 homes on Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue, parts of Nichols Road and perhaps Forest Avenue.

No one seems to know the exact origin of the term Gold Coast, not even the curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, David Wadsworth. Many residents believe it is a term used by outsiders to describe the exclusivity of homes along Cohasset's shoreline.

And like most people, Wadsworth can guess at the term's origin.

"The term probably refers to a summer colony of wealthy Boston businessmen who built big houses on large pieces of property with the highest value in town," Wadsworth said.

Whatever the origin of the term, it does a good job of describing one of the most beautiful, and wealthiest, areas on the South Shore and arguably in the state. It is also an area that is just as rich in history as it is in high-priced property.

The origins of the Gold Coast date back to the late 19th century. Early in the 19th century, hotels and inns lined the land that ran along the shore of Cohasset.

Much of the land in the area at that time was untouched forests, pastures and farmland.

Wealthy businessmen from Boston and other parts of the country vacationed in Cohasset for sports fishing and to shoot "coot," a type of migratory seabird.

Impressed with the untouched land that ran along the coast, some of these businessmen began buying up property and building summer homes.

The cool summer breeze seemed a welcome relief to these businessmen from the hot temperatures in Boston.

The word began to spread about the beauty of Cohasset's shoreline and the availability of land for men with a lot of money.

The first estates went up around 1870, with construction of new homes lasting through the end of the century.

Some of the country's most famous industrialists and businessmen built summer estates on the coast.

"Wealthy Bostonians and industrialists bought up land along the shore roads and built many summer cottage estates," Wadsworth said.

Cyrus McCormick of Chicago, the inventor of the cotton gin, built an estate called the Caravels on Nichols Road.

George Crocker, a Massachusetts politician and president of the state senate, also put up an estate along the Gold Coast.

Henry Whitney bought and built an enormous estate that ran Jerusalem Road to the modern Whitney Woods.

Homes along the Gold Coast display some of the most beautiful architecture in the region. Most were large, Victorian style homes, although there was no set architectural style in use.

"The one thing those homes had in common was that they were lavish, detailed homes built on large estates," Wadsworth said.

Many of these men were also benefactors to the town, donating land and money to Cohasset, and setting up trusts that still exist today.

Town leaders were so impressed with the gifts of the men who summered on the Gold Coast and the benefits to the tax base that they built Nichols Road hoping to attract more estates.

One of the gifts to the town is about to be razed by the town. Concerned about the lack of fire brigade coverage on the Gold Coast, one businessman built the North Cohasset Fire Station to house the town's horse drawn fire wagon.

Things boomed until around 1913 when the federal government introduced a federal income tax.

"Things boomed for quite a while, but then the summer colony dried up by World War I," Wadsworth said. "One reason was the federal income tax cut into the Edwardian lifestyle of the people. Then after World War I came the depression, which added to the problems."

Mary Hartshorne, 69, lived on the Gold Coast during the Great Depression. Her grandparents owned an estate and three homes at the corner of Atlantic Avenue and Forest Avenue.

Hartshorne's parents found it impossible to make a decent living during the depression, so they moved into a smaller cottage on the estate, essentially a four-bed room house.

Hartshorne said she doesn't consider her grandparents' homes to be a part of the Gold Coast.

"The houses weren't grand enough to be part of the grand homes of the Gold Coast," Hartshorne said. "The houses were uninsulated and weren't really fit for year-round habitation."

But Hartshorne remembers that there were some truly grand estates along the Gold Coast. She cited the Roy Estate and the Rust Estate, now a subdivision, as examples of the most beautiful locations.

Wadsworth also cited the Roy Estate as one of the gems of the Gold Coast, along with a huge home on Jerusalem Road built from rock cut out of the adjacent landscape.

"That house on Jerusalem Road looks just like a big fortress overlooking the ocean," Wadsworth said. "It's really a matter of taste, but as an historian, I marvel at the magnificent architecture."

The area continued to decline, and after World War II, the original owners or their descendants began selling off the land for subdivisions.

Areas like Linden Drive and Little Harbor Road were once an integral part of the summer colony of the Gold Coast.

Wadsworth said many of the owners found the property to costly to support, or too large and expensive to maintain.

"The old families divested themselves of their estates," Wadsworth said. "In some cases they just didn't want them any longer and sold them out of the family."

Now the Gold Coast lives on in a slightly smaller form than the original. Some of the properties are still owned by descendants of the men who built the original estates.

But the land remains among the most valuable and exclusive on the South Shore.

James Laggrotteria, Chairman of the board of assessors, said the Gold Coast properties are valuable not only for their size, but because of their close proximity to the ocean.

"The land values are higher there because of the ocean view," Laggrotteria said. "Anything that fronts the water with a view of the ocean is typically valuable."

Planning board Chairman Al Moore said the true magnificence of the Gold Coast is visible only from a boat.

"Consider the Roy Estate on Jerusalem Road, which is hidden from the street behind an eight to 10-feet high stone wall," Moore said. "But if you get in a boat and travel along the shore, then the view of those estates is truly magnificent."

Moore said that while the Gold Coast is a term probably derived from outsiders traveling the coast by boat and viewing the estates, the entire town has come to be identified with that idea of old homes controlled by old, quiet New England money.

And while not everyone in Cohasset can claim to be part of that old tradition, everyone can certainly point to the Gold Coast as one of Cohasset's treasures.

Today, the Knapp Estate (Clarence Knapp House), 438 Jerusalem Rd., is home to Mr. and Mrs. John R. Roy.

reached for comment. Barry's lawyer, Attorney Anton Moehrke, confirmed that refuse had been placed in Area IV-B.

But Moehrke said the health board, the town's engineering consultant, Camp Dresser and McGee (CDM) and DEP inspected all site plans prior to the beginning of filling and found nothing wrong.

"It does appear that there was some filling in Area IV-A beyond the site assignment," Moehrke said. "While that may be the case, to my knowledge the fact is this was done as a mistake and done with complete openness."

Moehrke said the health board, CDM and DEP each inspected the site once a month for three months prior to filling beginning.

"This is not something the landfill did secretly," Moehrke said. "Everyone involved was aware of what was being done, DEP approved it, and the town's consultant, one of the premier landfill experts available, reviewed it."

Last week Moehrke said it was possible there was a discrepancy between what the state approved for the landfill and what the town approved, which may account for any alleged filling in unpermitted areas.

McNabb discovered the illegal dumping himself after comparing various maps from 1987 through 1997 showing the boundaries of the landfill. McNabb said the maps clearly showed that refuse was being placed well beyond the legal edge of the landfill.

Barry produced a map at the meeting which he said incorrectly showed the edge of the landfill liner in Area IV-A extending beyond its legal limit. The liner was installed in 1989.

McNabb said the map, dated April 1987, which Barry submitted clearly shows the boundary of Area IV encroaching on Area IV-B. The map, which was revised in 1991, does not contain a stamp of approval from DEP.

McNabb said there is no way of knowing if the map is approved because it does not contain the DEP stamp.

If the map was stamped by DEP, then the regulatory agency made a terrible mistake, McNabb said.

"I don't believe DEP approved the that map because all the other maps from 1989 show a very clear delineation of Area IV-A," McNabb said. "There's no way there can be an error. CHL has used the same maps and the same engineer all along. Paul Barry himself is out there driving a bulldozer on the property."

In 1987, CHL applied for a special permit to accept household refuse and to allow land-filling Area IV-B.

The zoning board denied the request, citing health hazards and possible damage to the water resources district.

A 1997 map, which CHL submitted as part of its request for a vertical expansion, showed the company was placing fill into Area IV-B, according to McNabb.

The area that was filled is 500-feet long and as much as 30-feet wide. McNabb said the illegal area could cover as much as half an acre.

Moehrke said the fill in Area IV-B did not pose a health threat and was a modest deviation when compared to the 15-acre footprint of the entire landfill.

But the problem is exacerbated by the height of the refuse, according to McNabb.

Landfills are built as slopes. As the edge of the landfill is reached, operators must slope the refuse gradually so it doesn't end up as a 200-foot-high cliff.

All slope heights are pre-determined by the state and strictly regulated.

But the height of the refuse has not yet been determined. The extended area may also have allowed CHL to raise the height of the legal landfill beyond it legal limits because of the longer slope.

McNabb said the next step is to determine what to do about the situation.

Health board member Tom Cook was wary of forcing CHL to remove the refuse, according to McNabb. He worried that disturbing the refuse could create odors and leakage.

Whatever the outcome, McNabb viewed the discovery of the latest violation as a great victory for the people of Cohasset.

"This is a big-time victory," McNabb said. "Paul Barry basically came clean and said that he did it."

CHL is no longer dumping in Area IV-B, and so a legal cease and desist order, which is appropriate in this situation, has no effect.

McNabb said it may be possible to interpret a cease and desist order as an order for removal of all refuse because it would be the only appropriate mitigation.

The latest violation by CHL comes on the heels of a Norfolk Superior Court hearing Nov. 11 on the company's appeal of a board of health decision in 1996 denying its application to expand the landfill.

In a previous hearing, the court denied CHL's claims that the town had violated its civil rights. The court also prevented CHL from calling new witnesses for testimony after the case had concluded.

CHL and the town will appear in court on Friday to deliver 1/2-hour depositions for and against the health board's denial of the proposed expansion.

CHL also has a case pending in the state land court challenging the town's water resources protection district. Lawyers for CHL say the district's lines were arbitrarily drawn to prevent the landfill from expanding

Mr. Lobster Lab keeps project afloat

For a more interesting question, he suggested, could some lobsters could even be left-handed?

"They have a crusher claw and a pointer claw," Ulmer said. briefly outlining a question that would teach young students how to design a scientific experiment by counting the number of lobsters with crusher claws on the left or right.

As Ulmer sees it, the goal behind the Lobster Lab starts with such elementary stuff.

"It starts with building on children's innate curiosity — about starfish, hermit crabs, the things found on rocks and in tidal pools," Ulmer explained. "Younger children are insightful in the questions they ask." Moreover, because questions sometimes lead to scientific experiments, Ulmer envisions a professional staff at the Lobster Lab on hand to help youngsters evaluate questions, discard the ones that cannot be answered, and design experiments to solve the ones that can.

But once the questions start, the discoveries that follow can be anything but elementary, as the man behind the Lobster Lab knows first-hand.

Ulmer grew up in Murray Hills, New Jersey, in the shadow of Bell Telephone Laboratories, one of the major research and development facilities in the world. That is one reason he was lucky enough to discover his own "passionate fascination" for science early. A fan of the "Watch Mister Wizard" TV show, Ulmer moved on to the challenges of the amateur scientist projects published in Scientific American magazine. He had his own laboratory in the basement of his home and actually built a particle accelerator using scraps from scientists at Union Carbide and Bell Telephone Laboratories.

"My grandfather was in charge of the physical plant at the Labs," he said and retrieved some of the power supplies and pumps the scientists threw out. They ended up in Ulmer's home laboratory.

After earning a degree in both biology and physics from Williams College, Ulmer went on to the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute and the Ph.D. program at MIT.

"It was more to study biology than the marine organisms themselves," he said.

For instance, sea urchins produce transparent eggs which are convenient to look at under the microscope, while dogfish shark have a kidney system that is easy to work with.

Lobsters are interesting too.

"Lobster fishing is a substantial local industry," Ulmer said in defending his choice of the crustacheon for the learning lab.

Though the research is not primarily meant to have commercial implications, Ulmer noted there are some ways science might eventually help the lobsterman.

"We could try to develop an aquaculture," he said, noting the problem of "farming" lobsters has been due to their cannibalistic tendencies in confinement.

But the main mission, he maintained, is to get a well-equipped place for youngsters who have a keen interest in the sciences.

"Look at what we offer children by way of extracurricular activities. Almost every athletic program but next to nothing for students who are more scientifically inclined. They are huddled at home behind their PC's which are a poor surrogate for a laboratory with equipment and a professional staff that's there to supervise."

If Ulmer succeeds in getting the funding for the Lobster Lab, he will be operating one of only several learning and research labs on the East Coast. Yet the Lobster Lab will be different, and Ulmer has put forward a more ambitious view of the type of research the older youngsters can accomplish which, he said, might even include credits in articles published in major journals, as well as the collection and analysis of data.

By comparison, at the Schaefer Oceanology Lab in Marion, science teacher Robert Harlow backed the general view that youngsters could contribute original scientific research by collecting and analyzing data according to parameters set by scientists. But Harlow doubted K-12 could do more advanced work, as Ulmer has appeared to maintain.

Ulmer, an MIT-trained Ph.D., also is nursing some lofty aspirations for the enterprise. Ultimately, this research center, to be built around the theme of studying the lobster could eventually lead to a genome (pronounced gee-nome) project, he said, spelling out the exact DNA sequence of the lobster.

Lobster Lab proposal inches forward

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The embattled Lobster Lab will crawl to the next stage, as selectmen prepare to issue a new Request for Proposal for the educational research facility this week.

After an hour of wrangling over verbiage Monday night, selectmen agreed to eliminate several items of contention in the RFP and approve the document after those changes are made.

Negotiating the lease agreement will be the next step once the proposal is accepted.

However, judging from the amount of contention among selectmen this week, there are no guarantees that process will go smoothly.

Lab proponent Kevin Ulmer urged selectmen to quit quibbling and get the RFP out.

"There's not a whole lot of sense in 'word-smithing' this thing to death," he said about the RFP. suggesting the details could be worked out in the lease agreement.

The annual town meeting last spring approved issuing an RFP. A few months later — in frustration with the amount of detail selectmen were seeking — Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation withdrew from the plan. CLC's departure prompted selectmen to get another read on the voters' wishes at last month's special town meeting which approved issuing a new RFP.. (CLC is the non-profit group that raised the money to refurbish the Lightkeepers House and turn it into successful a function hall).

The new RFP includes comparative evaluation criteria which are weighted. At the urging of Selectman Diane Sullivan the "cost of renovation" was eliminated because it gave fewer points for spending more to refurbish the building.

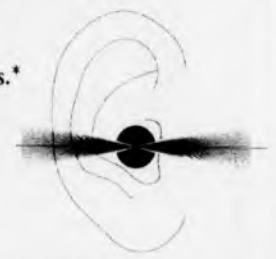
"I think that's objectionable. It's not wise to look at $500,000 more favorably than a larger amount," Sullivan said.

Another sticking point was the term of the lease which is set at two years rather than 10. However, Selectman Ronnie McMorris explained that the two-year term is automatically renewable every two years for up to ten years if the proposer meets the timetable set for in the lease for renovations and conducting programs. McMorris said putting the Lobster Lab on a two-year automatic renewal will take the subjectivity out of the process.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the criteria for renewal would be negotiated in the lease and would protect the town and the lobster lab.

Selectmen also struck the criteria for "compatibility with the Hagerty Property."

They added a criteria to give more weight to not increasing the interior square footage of the building. After consulting with an architect, CLC had proposed expanding the interior space of the Hagerty house - a proposal which some selectmen at the time took issue with.



Sullivan urged the board give the lab a chance.

"Give them a little breathing space," she said.

At one point the discussion digressed and some selectmen and a member of the audience reiterated their objections to the Lobster Lab.

District attorney announces new juvenile diversion program

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

DA Jeffrey Locke has grown dissatisfied with the inconsistent treatment of juveniles charged with crimes in Norfolk County.

Wednesday Locke stepped up his efforts to deal with juvenile prosecution and announced a new Juvenile Diversion Program.

Such juvenile diversion programs are supposed to give first-time teen offenders a break and keep them out of the criminal justice system, hopefully permanently. Primarily, they allow law enforcement officer to place teenage first-time offenders in various types of counseling rather than in jail, provided the youths are facing charges on minor offenses.

For instance, a first-offender charged with driving under the influence of alcohol would not be eligible for the diversion program, Locke said, because of the serious nature of the crime. However, teens facing any of four lesser charges (such as possession, transporting, purchasing or using a false ID to purchase alcohol) would probably sidestep the criminal justice system.

Locke said the program was not an expansion of the current efforts but stopped short of saying the existing programs did not work.

"I would view it as new," Locke said, casting back for a model to a juvenile justice program operated by the DA's office during the tenure of former district attorney William Delahunt.

That program, when ended due to budget and staff cuts, was iuniversally regarded as successful within the courts, the police and the criminal justice system."

Locke also indicated the new effort was only part of a comprehensive assault on juvenile crime. In addition to trying 13 youths as adults under the provisions of the Youthful Offender Law, the DA's office has established a special Juvenile Prosecution Unit, with two full-time attorneys to deal with lesser crimes.

Furthermore, Locke's office has designated a victimís advocate to help victims through the court process and is taking steps to deal with youngsters who are "at risk"for committing crimes, though they have not yet been charged with an offense.

Cohasset police officers, such as Sgt. Robert Jackson who met with Locke Wednesday, appeared to be pleased with the new initiative from the DAís office which will be more comprehensive than the current diversion program.

As the officer described the old procedure, "If they're a first-offender and it's for an alcohol-related charge and there's no record, they'll put them in a diversion program," said Jackson, the Cohasset police prosecutor. Typically, he said, the youths are required to go to a three-hour program sponsored by the Mothers Against Drunk Driving at the Quincy District Court. The class costs $50.

"If it's completed," police prosecutor Jackson said, "the case is dismissed, prior to arraignment. It avoids them getting a police record which is something that sticks with them the rest of their lives."

However, under the new program, the DAís office would maintain records of juveniles who went through the diversion program, though the office records would not be part of the state's probation record, according to Locke.

Jackson also said though the department generally tries to use the juvenile diversion program, it's not automatic.

"It's just for kids who havenít been in trouble before," Jackson said. iIf weíve had trouble with them before, say in school, we don't divert them."

Under the new rules, in addition to behavioral counseling, such as the MADD program offered, the youths must also complete a community service assignment.

"Community service must be part of any diversionary program," Locke said. "Youngsters should see their behavior has offended the community at large."

However, Locke also said the diversion program was not mandatory, and youths and their parents would have to formally agree to go through the process which, if completed, would ilead to a staying of the criminal charges."

The Mariner's police page publishes news items about arrests of underaged drinkers as well as teens who have been charged with possession of alcohol. But what happens afterwards to accused youths once the police are involved?

At a recent meeting of the Drug and Alcohol Committee, selectman Nan Roth raised just that question. The answer, as it turns out, depends on the individual case and is part of a developing story coming through the Norfolk County DA's Office.

A PAIN IN THE SACROILIAC

The sacroiliac joint connects the fused vertebrae known as the sacrum to the two large bones of the pelvis, known as the ilia. Located just above the hip, this joint is particularly vulnerable to injury and strain. Rather than being held together by muscles, the sacroiliac's integrity is maintained by strong ligaments, and thus has a relatively limited range of motion. Despite these limitations, the position of this joint serves to earmark it as a shock absorber for the other tissues of the back. Problems arise when postural abnormalities, muscle tension, abnormal leg length, or damaging repetitive movements cause the sacroiliac joint to lose even more of its mobility. Back pain is often the unfortunate result. When any of these factors pose a problem, the chiropractor seeks to relieve the underlying cause.

Through the use of conservative, non-surgical, drug-free care, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC provides chiropractic care from acute symptomatic relief to wellness care. CHS GRADS AT BOWDOIN

Best of luck to CHS grads at Bowdoin College who have played a part in Bowdoin's history! Their men's soccer team has recorded a record-setting year, posting the most wins ever per season in the history of the college. They played in the NCAAA tournament at Brunswick, Maine, Nov. 15. This milestone could not have been achieved without the superb efforts of Bowdoin senior Chris Kondrat and sophomore Erik Henry. Good goin', guys! By the way, if those two names sound familiar, that's because they were stars for CHS too, and super guys, with great families! We cannot wait to hear the results!

PLAN FOR T-DAY

This is the week we begin in earnest to plan for Thanksgiving day — here is the perfect way to cook in utter peace, and keep everyone out of the kitchen at breakfast time. Once again the Sons of the American Legion are going to hold their breakfast from 7:30 until 9:30 a.m.! All you can eat, $4 per person, food guaranteed to be yummy! As usual Tom Wigmore and his able crew will be on deck to take your order, fill you up, then send you off to the game (in Hull this year). By the time everyone leaves Hull, they will be more than ready to eat that turkey — great plan, don't you think?

30TH CLASS REUNION

KNOWN THE WORLD OVER

Cliffie Dickson is now known the world over! At least the other side of the world! Cliff's son-in-law Robert Dickson (yes that is right) went to Melbourne, Australia, on a work assignment and his wife Kelly joined him on a holiday. Before departing, Robert asked Cliffie for some Cohasset Fire patches to trade while down under. Of course, we all know how resourceful Cliffie is, he came up with patches and shirts for the Aussies!

While Robert slaved away, Kelly found the local Melbourne Fire Brigade as well as the Melbourne Fire Museum. When she told them she was the daughter of a retired fireman of 52 years, they rolled out the red carpet! They dressed her in authentic Australian fire garb and took pictures for her dad. Kelly exchanged the patches and shirts with the MFB as well as with a fellow visiting from the Country Fire Association.

The CFA is responsible for the fire in the bush outside the populated areas of Melbourne. The retired firemen who man the Fire Museum, extended an invitation to Cliffie for a visit and offered to put him up in a recently restored "flat" in the 200-foot Easthill fire lookout. What do you think, Cliff, are you going to take them up on it? Kelly doesn't think so, after a 23-hour flight she's not sure she could do it again! She did exchange addresses and hopes her dad will start corresponding with her new friends. Kelly and Robert want to thank Gramma, Lee and good friend Jen Peterson for taking care of their children while they were gone. Apparently all the children were well behaved except for Mackenzie (18 months), who Gramma threatened to mail Fed Ex to Australia!!

MacDonald of Brockton, and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Brazauskas of Norwell.

JINGLE BELL WALK

The South Shore Community Center invites families and friends to join the holiday spirit at the Jungle Bell Walk. It is a Cohasset tradition offered by the SSCC; it begins at 1:30 p.m. Nov. 28, when Santa Claus arrives by boat with his elves at Cohasset Harbor. After Santa distributes jingle bells to the children, he will ride the fire truck and the walk goes from Elm to Main Street. At 2 p.m. the center welcomes you to partake in cookies, beverage and a holiday sing-along. Santa will be upstairs in the center to pose for pictures with you and your children. Merchants participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers. Please stroll through the village to share in the local shops' holiday ambiance. At 2:45 p.m. on the Common there will be a "Turkey Tot Trot" for ages 3 to 10. You must pre-register for this event ($2 per participant). All will receive a prize. The bells of St. Stephen's will play from 2 to 4 p.m.; there will be hayrides from 2:30 to 4 p.m. The festivities culminate on Cohasset Common at 4 p.m. with the lighting of the tree. The rain date for this Jingle Bell Walk will be Nov. 29 — don't miss it!

Please keep your news coming! There is tons of it!

Pay per throw

Selectman Merle Brown gets a little defensive about the proposed 'pay per throw' trash disposal system and who can blame him?

This week again, his fellow board members looked askance when approval of RTF regulations was mentioned as a topic for a future agenda.

"Does that include that buck-a-bag program?" they asked suspiciously.

Perhaps they are worried about political fallout.

What started out last year as an interesting idea went down in flames even before town meeting much to the dismay of the recycling committee on which Mr. Brown is a member.

A group of citizens felt being charged for town trash bags was nothing more than a new tax and threatened to strip selectmen's power to set rates for the Recycling Transfer Facility through a citizens petition at the annual town meeting.

Yet the system has worked in other towns quite successfully and without resident rebellion.

Halifax and Milton are two towns which adopted the program and educated their citizenry that paying per bag will increase recycling and therefore save in the long run. Scituate is considering the program.

Sure if you don't recycle, paying per bag is going to be a lot more costly than a $65 annual dump sticker. If you are a three-to-four bag a week family — well, you can do the math.

But that's the whole idea. Because you'll be paying $1 for the bag, you won't want to use as many and might recycle more.

For too long, we've all thought of trash as someone else's problem. We take it to the RTF where it's hauled away and disappears from our lives.

Recycling isn't as easy as just tossing everything. But tossing what can be used again is bad for the environment and the future of our planet.

We think the pay-per-throw-system has merit.

In the months ahead, there will be more public education meetings on the plan and we'll carry any new developments in the Mariner.

We hope that most residents will approach the idea with an open mind.

We think Cohasset, which recycles a healthy percentage of its trash, can do even better.

Recycling is too important to be a political hot potato.

A resident recently wrote to selectmen and said the town doesn't have to be number one in recycling.

That's not the point. It's all about personal discipline, a little planning, and a lot of caring about what happens to mother earth and all that trash.

Kind thoughts appreciated

To the Editor:

I would like to thank all the good people of Scituate and Cohasset for all the "get well" cards.

Also all the visits to the Braintree Rehab Hospital during my two and one half months stay after my recent stroke.

Thank you all very very much.

Making a difference

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Cohasset High School "Social Awareness Organization," I would like to thank the many generous donors who contributed to our "AIDS Dance-a-thon." Together, we danced for 45 hours and raised about $800 for AIDS Action Research.

Students, parents, and neighbors made pledges and donations. We joined hundreds of people from around the state in trying to make a difference and I think we did.

Teen center grateful for support

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Board of Directors, the staff and the teens at the Cohasset Teen Center, I am writing to thank our wonderful community for all their support over the past several months. We have undertaken many different fund-raising events, from selling balloons at the Farmer's Market to painting pumpkins at the Harvest Festival to hosting a haunted house. We even held an adult dance a few weeks back to help boost our funds.

Our efforts have not gone unnoticed, as we have earned more than $1,000 combined. We have you, our community, to thank for our success. It is an ongoing venture to keep the building up and running, as we are funded totally by community donations. The teens are most appreciative, as they will now be able to purchase some much needed equipment for the center.

We are always seeking volunteers to serve on the board. We welcome new members with fresh, new ideas. If you have children who are currently in grades 7 or 8, you should consider coming on board. Encourage your child to attend the center, and enjoy all it has to offer. Parents of children who will one day become a teen, please think about becoming a board member, as well.

Again, thanks for a successful summer/fall fund-raising season.

Phyllis Schlafly sounds educational alarm locally

"How many of your students can read," Phyllis Schlafly asked the eighth-grade teacher who had volunteered to pick her up at Logan recently to take her to the First Annual Boston Chapter Brunch of the Eagle Forum at the Lantana in Randolph. "About 60 percent," was the answer according to Schlafly. Speaking on the subject of "Crisis in the Classroom" before some 300 attendees, Schlafly documented the dramatic changes in American education in the past 50 years.

Focusing on curriculum, Schlafly criticized whole language reading programs used in schools where students are taught to memorize words. According to Schlafly these programs have led us to the point where now eighth graders can't read. Schlafly stressed a return to basics in education and a return to teaching reading by the use of phonics.

The same problems exist with the teaching of mathematics, according to Schlafly. "Students should be able to do their math tables by the end of the fourth grade, but instead they are using calculators," she said.

Schlafly criticized the so-called "Outcome Based Education" philosophy which she says assumes every child will achieve a number of outcomes and that these will be adjusted to meet expectations. For example, if the young student gets Cs and Ds, the grades will be adjusted to meet the expected outcome. Another program which Schlafly found harmful is the "School to Work" programs where children are identified early on for a certain type of work. These programs result in a situation where the child is not allowed to reach his or her full potential Schlafly said.

These problems have not been solved by the schools embracing of national standard testing. Rather the situation has been exacerbated so that the schools teach students how to take tests, rather than focusing on critical learning skills. Likewise, the new emphasis on globalism has led to a situation where a recent text on American history named George Washington only once and did not even refer to Paul Revere or Thomas Jefferson. Schlafly believes that children ought to learn their own history first and where they came from. The emphasis on the global village at the expense of learning American history is a step on the path of the erosion of Constitutional rights.

Phyllis is author of 16 books on topics as varied as family, politics, feminism, and national defense. Schlafly's monthly newsletter is now in its 30th year. Her syndicated column appears in 100 newspapers; her radio commentaries are heard on 220 stations and her radio talk show on education is heard weekly on 55 stations.

The First Annual Brunch was co-chaired by Nancy O'Toole of Cohasset and Marie Sturgis of Scituate.

Josh Cutler holds campaign kick-off

Josh Cutler launched his campaign for state representative this week to a packed house in Hingham. Despite driving rain and thunderstorms, more than 200 supporters attended the kick-off event at the Sons of Italy Hall last Friday. Cutler was introduced by Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts of Cohasset and Phil Johnston, former New England Director of the U. S. Department of Health and Human Services.

In announcing his support of Cutler, Johnston called the candidate "a bright and energetic leader who knows his way around Beacon Hill. Cutler can bring new energy to the Third Plymouth District," said Johnston.

"He is what we need in the Massachusetts Legislature, a progressive, forward-thinking activist who can bring new purpose and new ideas to the district."

Cutler is challenging incumbent Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, a Cohasset Republican, who has been in office for 22 years. The district is comprised of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset.

"I have a great regard for Rep. Murray and all the years she has served our district, but I think it's time for a change," said Cutler.

"I'm running for state representative because we need active, progressive leadership in the district. I'll bring this kind of approach to all the issues we face — whether it's protecting our open spaces and coastlines, moving forward with education reform, or protecting the working families of the South Shore."

Hedlund holds town hall office hours

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) and/or members of his staff will be at the Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Avenue for office hours the third Thursday of each month. On Nov. 20, from 10 to 11 a.m. the state senator and/or his staff will be available to meet and/or assist residents.

In addition, Sen. Hedlund's district office, located at 66 Sea St. in Weymouth, will be open Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The telephone number is (781) 340-9866.

"The whole purpose of my district office is to meet with and serve my constituents in a more accessible and convenient setting," Hedlund said. "It means a lot to me to be able to talk with constituents face to face. Together we can get a lot done."

Thanks for Halloween fair support

To the editor

For more than 20 years the Halloween Fair on the Common has been both a fall tradition and a major fundraiser for the South Shore Community Center Nursery School. It is a delight to see the costumes, the scurry of people, small and not so small, across the Common as children and parents alike participate in the activities and games, to sense the feeling of community that is created as families meet and mingle it is one more reason why Cohasset is special.

The Halloween Fair is also special because each fall it brings together a small army of parents and nursery school supporters in support of our programs and students. With each year the fair grows and becomes more successful due in large measure to the efforts of these volunteers. The success of this year's fair equaled last year's , which had been our most successful to date, and I remain overwhelmed by the support and generosity of this area's businesses, parents and students. Many, many thanks are due to Shaw's, Kinnealey Meats, Quickava and the Silver Spoon Cafe for their generous donations. Equally, I woe much to area residents who shared or donated materials for the various activities and to Cohasset's Deer Hill, Middle and Senior high School students who helped staff the fair. Additional thanks go to our local Girl Scouts who also helped run the activities and games.

And finally, thank you to our nursery school parent volunteers for their time and tireless energy on behalf of the school, and to the families who each year make the Halloween Fair on the Common a part of their Halloween celebration. The funds raised through this effort do much to help raise our village's children.

Selectmen's shenanigans – again!

To the editor

Fair-minded voters of Cohasset should take the trouble to examine the new Request for Proposals for the Learning Lab, and determine whether it is intended to encourage this and future gifts to the town, or whether it sets a new standard for discouragement of volunteerism.

It would be common sense to honor the clear wishes of the majority of the voters, to issue a simple RFP and to negotiate a spare and uncomplicated lease with the proponents so that energies can be concentrated on raising funds and getting the Lab established.

The evaluation criteria of the RFP appears to be designed to permit the selectmen to indulge their personal animosities and pet quibbles, under the guide of exercising fiduciary responsibility. For example, it is judged more advantageous to the town for the project to cost less than $500,000 than to cost between $500,000 and $1 million! And unacceptable if it costs more than $1 million! If a citizen's group were offering to raise funds for a new playing field would we say: "OK, but we prefer a cheaper field to a better one?"

It has been pointed out numerous times that the Lab will have no need to use parking spaces at the times when parking spaces are in demand for boat trailers on summer weekends, hence there is no conflict. Yet the evaluation criteria is used to flog this tired and phony issue, and add to the demerits that could be the selectmen's excuse to reject the proposal, or to harass the proponents into some punitive commitment.

Granted that the town is not well served if the project drags on interminably, but neither is it well served by criteria which gives high marks for an impossibly short schedule and low marks for a reasonably achievable one.

Voters should pay attention, and stop asking me "What is wrong with these people?"

Taking steps to curb teen alcohol, drug abuse

By Stacey Powers
CORRESPONDENT

The drug & alcohol committee plans to implement several steps to raise community awareness of the problem of underage drinking and illegal drug use among teens.

The steps include creating a network of support for parents to utilize, becoming a resource for the town to turn to, providing public access to useful drug and alcohol related information by posting data on the Cohasset web page, and devising positive alternative activities for kids.

Preventing teen drinking is an ongoing concern, the drug & alcohol committee said at ist meeting last week.

To that end, the group invited middle/high school Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo to talk about what happens at school functions if students show signs of drinking or drug use.

Teen center could be under rec department umbrella

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The Teen Center is searching for a solid financial foundation. This week, the board of directors asked the selectmen to look into taking over at least some of its operational expenses.

ìWe have very little money,î said Director Cathy Mueller-Bell Tuesday. ìWeíre appealing to the town to see if they can help us in any way.î

Mueller-Bell, who took over in March, said the Main Street center is used Friday and Saturday nights by about 20 youngsters, primarily seventh- and eighth-graders, with a few more boys turning out regularly than girls. To complement the weekend nights, the director said, she plans one special event a month, such as this Saturdayís Teen Turkey Feast. She also recently launched a community service project that took the youngsters to help out at a homeless shelter, the Mary-Martha Learning Center.

Though the building is really too small to accommodate many more than 20, according to board member Rosalie Collins, the Teen Centerís board is trying to use off-center locations, such as the high school, for events that draw more youngsters.

Overall their success has been limited, however.

ìThe membership is dwindling,î Collins said, and too much energy that should go into the centerís programs is being diverted to fund raising.

> "There are so many good things kids are doing. The town needs to show it really cares about kids and supports them."
> — BETSY CONNOLLY, TEEN CENTER BOARD MEMBER.

Collins is hoping the Teen Center will get some action from the selectmen. Though board members like Collins and Betsy Connolly acknowledged the community has been supportive of the center since its inception four years ago (and leased the Independence Building for a dollar a year) Connolly said it was important for the town to show the youngsters it appreciates them.

ìThere are so many good things kids are doing,î Connolly said. ìThe town needs to show it really cares about kids and supports them.î

Selectwoman Nan Roth, who took up the matter during the boardís meeting Monday, said she definitely favored looking into such options as teaming up the Teen Center and the Recreation Department, though she stopped short of saying she had come to any conclusions about the town taking over the center, at least to some extent.

ìI donít have a real strong opinion about the final form,î Roth said. ìI definitely agree theyíre having a hard time with fundraising, and they need to pay salaries to make it work.î

Despite the problems, Mueller-Bell said the goal has been to provide a sense of community and a place where the youngsters could feel they belonged, as well as a safe, drug-free and alcohol-free environment.

Moreover, the need for such centers has gained support as evidence has mounted teens are turning to alcohol at younger ages and in stronger potions, and the middle school set has been made the constant target of advertisements for cigarettes and liquor. According to physical education instructor Ronald Ford, the advertisers hold the view that the age is formative and critical..

ìIf they lose them then,î Ford said. ìTheyíre lost forever.î

committee, said it is sometimes difficult for adults to tell if children have been drinking.

DeLorenzo said "chaperones always follow procedures and must be able to see if something is happening in order to be able to control it.

"We are very preventative and always have lots of chaperones at dances," he said.

He added that when students are caught, the school follows through on punishment.

"We have zero tolerance in this town," he said.

DeLorenzo pointed out in the past 12 years, he has attended all but two dances.

"We have a great group of kids here in Cohasset," he said.

DeLorenzo praised the relationship between the middle/high school and police.

"The police department and the school have a great relationship and every incident that has been reported and looked into has been dealt with in the appropriate manner," he said.

The committee was also concerned about non-school events.

Rose Collins, board member of the Teen Center, said, "We need to come up with some solutions to the problem (of underage drinking) before something happens to our teens."

School committee member Joseph McElroy said young people need constructive alternatives to keep busy and stay out of trouble.

Those in attendance also discussed how some parents find it difficult talking about the issues of drugs and alcohol and the need for more open communicaiton between parents and their kids as well as networking among parents.

"As a community, our job is to keep our children safe in the community by setting rules and offering consequences for bad behavior," Collins said.

State offers Title V tax credit to homeowners

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Homeowners with septic systems who want to sell their homes fear Title V inspections almost as much as pink slips, heart attacks, and IRS audits.

So any assistance, whether low-interest loans or tax credits, is welcomed by home sellers awaiting the results of a Title V inspection.

State Senator Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has issued a memorandum outlining the details of a one-time tax credit of up to $6,000 over four years toward the cost of replacing or repairing a septic system that fails a Title V inspection.

The tax credit is available to all Massachusetts homeowners who have homes that fail Title V inspections.

Eligible homeowners could receive a tax credit not to exceed $1,500 in any tax year toward the replacement or repair of any septic system.

The credit would equal 40 percent of the total repair or replacement cost. The maximum repair cost eligible for 40 percent reimbursement is $15,000. More expensive repairs would receive a credit equal to 40 percent of the $15,000 maximum.

Eligible homeowners could receive a tax credit not to exceed $1,500 in any tax year toward the replacement or repair of any septic system.

Tax credit would be accessible in the year in which repairs or replacement work is completed.

The credit can be applied only to costs incurred after Jan. 1, 1995.

The credit would apply to all costs to replace or repair a failed septic system, including design and engineering costs.

State officials hope the program will perform two functions: encourage homeowners with septic systems to obtain Title V inspections and facilitate the sale of homes belonging to owners who fear an expensive septic tank replacement.

Approximately 20 percent of 25,000 homes inspected in 1996 failed Title V inspections.

According to state figures, about 65 percent of failed systems required repairs or replacements costing an average of between $11,000 and $15,000. The remaining 35 percent cost an average of between $7,000 and $8,000.

But these figures are little comfort to some Cohasset residents who are facing repairs of $40,000 or more because of expensive ledge removal or other factors.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said he wasn't sure that a tax credit would encourage residents to obtain inspections voluntarily.

"But any help absolutely is a good thing," Godzik said.

Town hall to get new telephone system

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset residents are going to have a bunch of new phone numbers to remember.

The town hall is getting a new numbering system so each department will have its own telephone line and voice-mail capability.

Starting in January, the old 383-9900 will be replaced by 383-4100, 4101, 4102 and so on.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the new system will save money in the long run because it will free up staff time.

He explained that the town hall currently has one main number which comes into the building inspector's office and the selectmen's office where the call is redirected to the appropriate department.

Haddad said the constant interruptions take away from employees in those offices getting their work done.

The new system will require 14 additional phone lines (there are six already). Total additional cost for the lines and service for the balance of fiscal year 1998 is about $3,800.

Next year, the service will cost about $4,400.

Haddad plans to approach the advisory committee for a reserve fund transfer to pay for this year's cost.

Selectman Nan Roth said that when Haddad is alone in the office, he can't talk to someone more than 30 seconds without the phone ringing.

It's unlikely any callers will get a busy signal because the voice mail boxes can pick up six calls simultaneously, Haddad said.

Inserts with town hall's new numbers will be included in the next tax bill and will be printed in the local newspapers.

Cohasset Food Pantry prepares for Thanksgiving

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Families all over town will have the opportunity to celebrate Thanksgiving next Thursday, including those that may have gone without in the past.

For the last four and a half years, the Cohasset Food Pantry has dedicated itself to helping families in need by providing food and supplies like tuna, cereal, fruit juices, soups, white rice pasta sauce, household cleaning products, laundry detergents and personal items.

This year, 30 Cohasset families will sit down to a traditional Thanksgiving turkey dinner with all the fixings, courtesy of the Cohasset pantry.

"The pantry provides them with a meal they may not otherwise have," said pantry volunteer Marjorie Steele.

This year, 30 Cohasset families will sit down to a traditional Thanksgiving turkey dinner with all the fixings, courtesy of the Cohasset pantry.

But the pantry has not done it alone. Donations from five churches in town as well as residents have aided the pantry in making the holidays a little brighter for poor and underprivileged families in town.

"The churches in town have been wonderful. Whenever there's a need, they've been there for us," she said.

Pantry volunteers will be distributing grocery bags filled with the ingredients for Thanksgiving dinner, including a fresh turkey, fresh vegetables, stuffing and dessert.

"We're pretty well set," Steele said, referring to the 20 to 30 stocked shelves in the basement of the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue.

Before the Cohasset pantry opened four and a half years ago, needy Cohasset families had to travel to Weymouth for assistance. While it took a year or two for families to catch on to the new pantry in Cohasset, a steady stream of about 30 families have sought food from the pantry during the past couple of years, Steele said.

The pantry, located at 43 Highland Avenue at the Second Congregational Church, is open for donations or visits from prospective clients on Tuesdays from 9 to 11 a.m., or call 383-0345.

CRUISE AROUND HAWAII

One of the challenges of planning a Hawaiian vacation can be choosing which islands to visit. If your dream includes some island-hopping, you might want to consider accommodations that will float along with you. This can avoid the hustle-bustle of arranging inter-island air transportation as well as the packing and unpacking that goes along with switching hotels. Thanks to a centuries-old maritime law, such port-to-port cruising is restricted to ships sailing under U.S. flags. Although this limits a traveler's choice to local cruse ships, it has also resulted in a unique opportunity to become immersed in authentic Hawaiian cultures. On board American Hawaiian Cruise's ships, for example, passengers can learn Hawaiian language, lore, history, dance, and music as they sail.

Travel in style among the beautiful islands of Hawaii on a cruise tailored to your dreams. You're sure to find the adventure you've been searching for through careful planning by SCITUATE HARBOR TRAVEL. We do it all for you here at 53 Cole Parkway, Scituate Harbor, from helping you choose a cruise, to sharing our experiences of places we've been, to making all the arrangements. Start by calling us at 545-4281 or 800-354-2720, then pack your peace of mind and begin your next travel adventure.

HINT: Hawaii is a lovely destination to visit any time of year, although winter tends to bring more rain and somewhat choppier waters.

Cohasseters honored by United Nations Association

Blustery winds and pouring rain did not dampen the spirits of individuals who gathered recently at the John F. Kennedy Library to honor two local Cohasset residents, Eleanor Bleakie and Lincoln Bloomfield. Both were honorees at the annual Untied Nations Association of Greater Boston dinner which this year honored six outstanding individuals for their contributions to international understanding. The other honorees were Field Haviland, Bishop William Murphy, Gov. Endicott Peabody and David Putnam.

The evening began with a reception in the soaring Pavilion at the library. Following the reception guests were greeted with the beautiful tunes of the Scottish bagpipes as they were piped into dinner. The honorees followed, receiving a standing ovation from everyone in the room. A sumptuous dinner prepared by Cuisine Chez Vous satisfied appetites and the presentations of awards which followed satisfied the spirits.

> "The United Nations was not created to take us to heaven but to keep us from hell."
> – WINSTON CHURCHILL

To begin the awards, Daniel Cheever, chairman and Janice Hunt, president of the United Nations Association of Greater Boston read from a letter from President Clinton congratulating all of the honorees. With humor and wit each honoree was presented with a silver engraved plate, a personal letter of congratulations from Senator Kerry and a certificate of recognition also from the senator.

In accepting her award Eleanor Bleakie recalled her lifetime of work with the World Affairs Council of Boston and noted her interest in international affairs which developed. Lincoln Bloomfield noted the urgency and necessity of the U.S. paying its $1.4 billion arrears to the United Nations and closed with a Winston Churchill quote stating, "The United Nations was not created to take us to heaven but to keep us from hell."

The evening closed as the storm abated outside and everyone left with uplifted spirits from an evening that honored six individuals who have helped, on an international level, to make the world a better place.

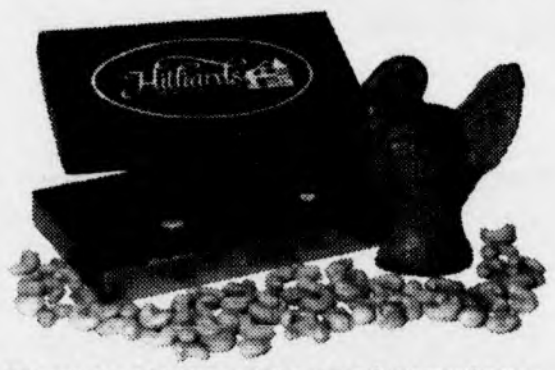
Honorees Eleanor Bleakie and Lincoln Bloomfield chat at the John F. Kennedy Library during the United Nations Association of Greater Boston dinner.

Mother's Club Annual Holiday House Tour

The Hingham Mother's Club will host a holiday house tour Sunday, Dec. 7, from 1 to 5 p.m. Enjoy a memorable holiday stroll through six beautifully decorated homes that will inspire you for the holidays.

The six homes reflect a variety of architectural style and a wonderful array of festive holiday decorations. Two homes are located on Hingham's historic Main Street, which is known for its charm and beauty. One was built prior to 1800 and the second built in 1811. Another historic home was built in 1875 with many 19th-century features. In contrast, there are three new homes reflecting the contemporary design of today's lifestyle. One house is a brick front colonial built in 1990 and designed by the current owner. Another house is located in the beautifully developed Conservatory Park area. Last, but not least, is an 11-year-old Captain's Cape.

Six local florists have generously donated the floral arrangements which adorn the front entrances of the homes. Special thanks to Exotic Flowers, Rose Cottage Design, Sweet William, Village Gardens, Hingham Greenery and Garden Craft. Also, thank you to Homegoods in Norwell for donating the lovely doormats for each house. Lastly, special thanks to Chuck Goldman of Inactive Media Solutions for donating his time and expertise in the graphic design and printing of the house tour posters and tickets.



Tickets are $15 in advance or $18 the day of the tour. Advance tickets may be purchased at Treasures in the Square, Brewed Awakenings, The Gifted Hand in the Square, Hingham Center Pharmacy, 294 Main St., and Homegoods in Norwell. By mail, make checks payable to Hingham Mother's Club and mail to Hingham Mother's Club, 23 Isaac Sprague Drive, Hingham, 02043. The tour is not wheelchair accessible.

At a recent board meeting of the Cohasset Social Service League, which is marking its 85th anniversary this year, there was a discussion of the history of the league and its many volunteers. The league wants to share these highlights with the town to show how the league continues to serve and to resurrect memories of old Cohasset.

Founded in 1912, the year Woodrow Wilson was elected President of the United States, the Social Service League began with five members: Mrs. Tower, Mrs. Bates, Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Howe (President), and Mrs. Gammons. Within a week these women recruited 30 additional members. Their motto was, "There are those who are lifted and those who lift. This league will lift." They hired a nurse who lived with a Mrs. Gross on Elm Street. The league provided her with a bicycle. At the time, there were 660 registered voters in the town, 69 were women. Prior to 1921, when women's suffrage became fully operative, in Massachusetts women were only allowed to vote for school committee members. There were 30 telephones in Cohasset, of course, no radio or TV, and horse and buggy was the primary mode of transportation.

The original purpose of the Social Service League was to help prevent disease in children. Malnutrition was a major problem at the time. The volunteers purchased a horse drawn "barge" or bus to transport residents from Beechwood to Elm Street, where their headquarters were, for keep-well clinics. According to the Cohasset Historical Society archives, the primary diseases handled by the town nurse in 1919 were syphilis, insanity, TB and rickets. The league formed a basket weaving class for boys and a sewing class for girls. In 1913, they established a branch library at Beechwood and a penny savings bank for children. They also initiated a school lunch program, served out of the Bates Building. At Christmas, they provided meals for needy families. During the 1918 Flu epidemic, nurses made 560 to 580 home visits in one month. The League bought a Ford runabout so the nurses could make these visits, but the hand crank was a problem. With contributions from the town and local churches, they were able to provide a self-starting automobile. A food pantry was set up during World War II; residents were encouraged to grow and donate produce. The league taught canning and preserving.

In the 1930s and '40s the motto of the Social Service League was, "To cooperate for the welfare of the people of the town to alleviate poverty, to promote thrift and good health and to help those who are trying to help themselves." A licensed social worker, called a "welfare worker" was hired. Six doctors were asked to join an advisory board. A thrift shop, the original consignment shop, was opened at the community center. The Willcutt Fund was established in the will of Mrs. Mary Hooper in memory of her father, Levi Lincoln Willcutt, to give financial assistance to couples over 70, who were in want, so that they might live out their lives in dignity in their own homes. This fund exists today serving several local families. The league conducted classes in nursing, pre- and postnatal care and reading help for children. They provided drivers to take patients to doctor's appointments. They put together an employment bureau, which exists today as the job bank.

Surfing the World Wide Web can lead to Cohasset

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's web page greets the net user with "Good Morning," "Good Afternoon," or "Good Evening," depending on the time of day.

There are also several options of where to go from there, such as Profile, Government, Business, Education, Map, Picture Tour, Directions to Cohasset, Weather and Our Guest Book.

It's all part of the new, improved — www.cohassetma.com — the town's address on the world wide web.

Nov. 12, the web page was demonstrated and discussed for interested citizens in order to examine other possible applications for the service.

The Rev. Robert Hurlbut, pastor of Community Church of Cohasset, designed the page and serves as web master.

The headings are self-explanatory. By clicking "Weather," the local weather forecast is displayed. Clicking on "Our Guest Book" brings up a collection of comments viewers have contributed after perusing Cohasset's web page.

"It looks like you have a beautiful town and I can't wait to come and visit," was one comment.

Another said, "I grew up in Cohasset but I haven't been back in a number of years. It was good to see the page. It reminded me of home."

"Guests" also left their e-mail addresses.

Maureen Maross of First Parish Church membership committee said she'd like to leave information about the church on the web page.

"It would be a good way to let people know the church is here," she said.

Hurlbut explained the church could create its own web page that could be linked to Cohasset's.

Sally Young, who has served on the alumni committee for the CHS Class of 1970, said an alumni directory might be a good idea. That way high school graduates could enter their current addresses and phone numbers in order to keep in closer contact with one another.

All major announcements and upcoming town events are listed on the web page.

Local businessman Bob Martin, one of the prime movers behind the project, said Cohasset's web page is in its infancy but predicts "someday the page will distribute information like nobody's business." About 200 people sign onto the page each week, Martin said.

DreamCom, a local company, provides the space on the net. Hurlbut said besides out of towners who visit the page, he receives a large number of e-mail messages from local residents who have viewed it. He sees the page becoming more of a communication tool where residents help shape the direction of what the page will be used for in the future.

Although the demonstration was plagued with technical problems, the main concept and points about the web page came across clearly.

Martin said the page is expanding every month and he invites everyone, if they haven't done so already, to sign on and check it out.

Social Service League shares its historical highlights

Following World War II, there were many volunteers available to help, as few women worked. At the time there was much poverty and much disease.

The league thrives today, serving Cohasset residents with counseling and support groups, provided by licensed social worker Pat Carleton, Meals on Wheels, nursing services, offered by public health nurse Judy Fitzsimmons, R.N. The Cohasset Consignment Shop at Shaw's Plaza is operated solely to benefit the programs of the Social Service League.

Many familiar Cohasset names appear on this partial list of past Social Service League Presidents:

COHASSET MARINER

Dreams pay off for local rider

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

Seventeen-year old Cohasset resident Sydney Johnston took tenth place in the under-18 division of the Rolex-Maclay National Championship for the ASPCA Horsemanship Classes at the recent 114th annual National Horse Show.

When Sydney Johnston was in the eighth grade, she faced was with a choice. Keep riding horses as a hobby or try and take it to the next level and work to become the best equitation rider that she could be.

Now 17 and a senior at Milton Academy, she's got the hardware to prove how right she was to stick with her passion.

"I've always loved horses," said Johnston, the daughter of Robert and Diane Johnston, who both are also active showjumping competitors on the New England and Florida circuits. "It was just a matter of me getting up the confidence to go forward with it to this level."

Johnston reached the pinnacle of success so far of her young life earlier this month by taking tenth place in the Rolex-Maclay National Championships for the ASPCA Horsemanship Classes held at the 114th National Horse Show, one of the biggest horse events scheduled in the United States each year.

This is the third time that Johnston had been a part of the national finals, but this year there was a little something added to the mix that made it what she now says was one of the best days of her life.

Instead of the past years when the event was held in places such as Harrisburg, PA, this year's contest was held at the world famous Madison Square Garden in New York City.

"I've never competed in front of that many people before in my life," said Johnston, who admitted to having a fairly sizable case of the jitters before competing in front of the couple of thousand people who came to the event. "I just wanted to do my best."

Her wish was granted.

Johnston made it in fine fashion out of the first round of 70 competitors, making it to the final round of 24 and knocking off a number of nationally ranked riders on her way to taking home the 10th place finish in the under-18 division.

"I don't think there was really that much pressure on me going into the final round," she remembered. "There were a lot of others riders there who people were expecting more of than me."

Yet still, the Cohasset resident was able to put all of her hard work and dedication together into a great showing.

"I was so happy because I was able to accomplish a goal that I had set for myself when I was 13-years-old," said Johnston. "It was a great feeling."

In the competition riders are judged on their ability to demonstrate correct form and skill to perform the required tests over fences or on flat ground in a smooth, controlled and accurate manner.

Competitors are given one course to work their way through in the first round and a second one to navigate in the finals.

"There's generally 10 to 12 jumps spaced out around the course and the idea is to keep looking composed and graceful while leading the horse around the course," Johnston explained. "You want to keep the ride looking as smooth and easy as possible."

As with any good rider, Johnston couldn't have done any of the without her horse Saint Patrick, a 10-year-old Dutch gelding that she's been going to shows with for the past four years.

Originally her father's horse. Saint Patrick and Johnston came together originally when her regular horse became ill just before a major competition.

Now, they have become inseparable.

"He's acts more like a dog than a horse," said Johnston with a laugh. "He always wants to go out and play and constantly is looking for someone to give him some food."

But, added Johnston, good old Saint Patrick is also one heck of a competitor.

"He is very confident with what he does and is extremely well behaved," she said. "We make a pretty good team."

Their teamwork did not come easily, though, as their needs to be a great deal of time put into training before a rider can get to know a horse and vice-versa.

Saint Patrick is housed down in Bourne at the Grazing Fields Farm. While training, Johnston would make the hour-long trip down to Cape Cod daily to train with the horse.

"You need to have dedication if you want to do something like this. It is a lot of work, but it's something that I wanted to do," said Johnston, who plans to take some time off from riding but is looking forward to the Florida showjumping circuit to get started after the first of the year so she can qualify for the 1998 nationals. Johnston credits coaches Kathy Fletcher and Julie Chandler with helping to give her the confidence to go as far as she has gone.

"There comes a point where you really have to choose whether you want to go at this on the top levels of competition," said Johnston. "Kathy and Julie really helped me build confidence in what I was doing."

As for the next step, Johnston said she would really love to give the Olympic team a run for the money, but college was the most important thing on her agenda.

Johnston has applied for early admission to Middlebury College with an eye towards studying something in the area of math or science.

Skippers bow to the Clippers, 26-6

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

The Norwell varsity football team has experienced a dream season all year, and Cohasset did very little to get in the way of that Monday night. In a game postponed from Friday night due to field conditions, the Clippers drubbed the Skippers by a score of 26-6.

The visiting Norwell squad was led by junior Brian Fabrizio's three touchdowns and took advantage of a Skipper team, which played with very little confidence.

The contest also marked the last home game for seniors Jamie Buick, Andy Hamilton, Pat Hurley, Daryl Jones, and John Kasameyer.

After Cohasset muffed the opening kick, Norwell's first strike occurred with less than a minute gone by, when Fabrizio rumbled 50 yards for the six. The extra point made it 7-0, but the scoreboard had barely changed when the Clippers again struck from 50 yards, this time on a pass from Brian Doherty.

Less than two minutes had passed, and the home team already trailed 14-0.

Another Fabrizio carry cranked Norwell's first quarter total to 20 points, while Cohasset was still saddled with a goose egg.

Cohasset's defense slowed the Clippers in the second quarter, with Fabrizio only scoring once. The blue offense picked up some first downs, with fullback Andy Hamilton breaking tackles, led by outstanding blocking from center John-Paul Laugelle and guards John Considine and Adam Sasso.

However, by halftime the Skippers would lose end Jamie Buick to a separated shoulder and running back Justin Golden to a badly bruised ankle. These two offensive threats limited quarterback Pat Hurley's offense, and the Skipper offense faltered for

Skippers look to halt Thanksgiving losing skid

Forget about records and how things may look on paper.

This one is not about statistics and who scored how many points this season.

This is Cohasset vs Hull on Thanksgiving Day.

More than football, this game is about school pride and the five senior class members of the Cohasset High School football team who want to make their final game in the blue and the white a memorable one.

For E/DE Jamie Buick, FB/LB Andy Hamilton, QB/S Pat Hurley, G/DE John Kasamayer and Brandon McDowell, Thursday morning may very well be the last time that they ever strap on the football gear competitively.

"It's something that I've started to think about a little bit," said Jamie Buick, as his final high school game approaches. "As we get closer to the game I'll be remembering all the good times I've had here at Cohasset and all the people I've had the chance to play with."

"I can't say enough about the great coaching that we have received here at the school," added senior captain Pat Hurley. "I'm also going to remember all my teammates, the intensity they brought to the game and their drive to be as good as they could be."

"Thanksgiving Day football is about more than a win/loss record," he added. "There's pride involved as well as wanting to do well in front of your friends and family."

The game is in Hull this year and will start at 10 a.m. As always, no matter how cold the Hull field may be on Thanksgiving morning, expect there to be a big crowd of Hull and Cohasset students, friends and alumni making their way to the game.

"When you play in Hull this time of the year, you know it is going to be cold," said Buick. "There's no real advantage for either team."

"You can probably expect somewhere around 2,000 people to be in attendance," added CHS athletic director Clark Chatterton. "We have a pretty strong rivalry with Hull."

It is a rivalry that for the most part has been dominated in recent years by the Pirates, who are the defending 6B Super Bowl champs.

This particular rivalry resumed after a long lay-off in 1985 and for the first three years Cohasset was in charge, winning games in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

They have not won a Thanksgiving Day game since. Hull has won for the last seven years running, including major drubbings in the last two seasons.

In wasn't that way on a Thanksgiving morning 40 years ago, when Cohasset took the measure of Hull 16-0 on their way to a perfect season. Players from that team as well as members of the graduating classes of 1958-1961 will be getting together for a reunion at Kimball's on the Friday after the football game.

"It should be a great evening," said Chatterton, who played a major part in putting the event together. "We've invited players, cheerleaders and classmates from that era to come back for the event and had a good response."

Chatterton said about 125 people are expected to come from 31 states to the reunion.

With those last two Thanksgiving losses in the back of their mind, Cohasset would like nothing better than to pull off a big upset and put Hull's Turkey Day hold over them to an end. "We haven't had the best of luck this season, but we want this game badly," said Hurley, a senior who has been a tri-captain this season along with Andy Hamilton and junior Justin Golden. "We've been through a tough year, but we've stuck with it and we want to end the year on a positive note."

Along with the extra few days of the work week, CHS players will also be going through some more traditional events next week. After Tuesday's practice, the senior members of the team will be carried off the practice field by their teammates.

On Wednesday morning, the seniors will have breakfast with their Hull counterparts.

Extra Points

Shoot-out's have got to be shot down

I can think of at least two things that I now know to be true as I finish my first season in the sports department:

A. This stuff is fun, and

B. Shoot-out's stink.

After nearly five years schlepping around covering selectmen meetings, budget hearings and every kind of death, plague, tragedy and pestilence that you could ever imagine, I cannot tell you the sheer joy that I've had covering the recent MIAA fall tournament games.

From the enthusiastic crowds to the outstanding male and female athletes of the area playing at the top of the game, there is not a better value for your sports dollar than a tourney game in any sport.

But if I could be king of all organized sports for one minute, I would only have one wish: get rid of the soccer shoot-out.

MIAA rules for the soccer shoot-out go like this. If there is a tie at the end of the 80 minutes of regulation play, the teams get a small rest and then play a 10 minute sudden death overtime period.

If that doesn't settle the issue, they switch ends and then play another 10 minute overtime period.

If that still doesn't shake out a winner, they go to the shoot-out, where five players from each squad alternate coming in on the opposing goaltender in a breakaway opportunity from 35 yards away.

So let me get this straight. A 20 game season, maybe one or two more in the tourney, not to mention the 100 minutes you just played as a team in regulation and overtime are decided in a one-on-one competition where somebody comes out a hero (the okay part) while another walks away feeling like they've let the their team, family and community down (the stinky part).

We need a little perspective here. These are not the 18-to 22-year-old (sometimes) more mature kids who play the game at the college level or the even more (supposedly) mature professional men and women who are paid for their services on the soccer field.

These are kids, some as young as 15-years-old, who for the most part do not need the pressure and anxiety associated with the drama of the shoot-out. They've got enough problems trying to adjust into young adulthood balancing academics and athletics in addition to studying to get their driver's license.

To whit, I'd like to offer a simple solution to this problem.

Let the kids play.

If it takes three, four or five overtimes to get the job done, so be it. It's a team game that gets most teams deep into the tourney and that should be what decides who moves onto the next level.

And this from the Extra Points mailbag...

A teacher from Hanover wrote me a letter recently raking me over the coals for what she considered to be a slap at the fairer sex by referring occasionally to girls' teams by such terms as the "Lady Dragons" or the "Lady Skippers."

According to the author, using the modifier before the nickname was either "intentional bias or plain and simple ignorance."

I choose number "B".

To be perfectly honest, I never gave it a second thought that such terms would be found offensive to the readers. Instead, the term "Lady" is used to help differentiate the various teams that we have to cover at the high school level.

No slight has ever been intended by referring to a team as the "Lady X's" rather than the "Gentlemen Y's" or something of that like, it's just been the accepted practice on the sports page from our newspapers all the way up to Sports Illustrated.

If readers have been offended by this practice, I offer you my sincere apology. It was never intended to be offensive.

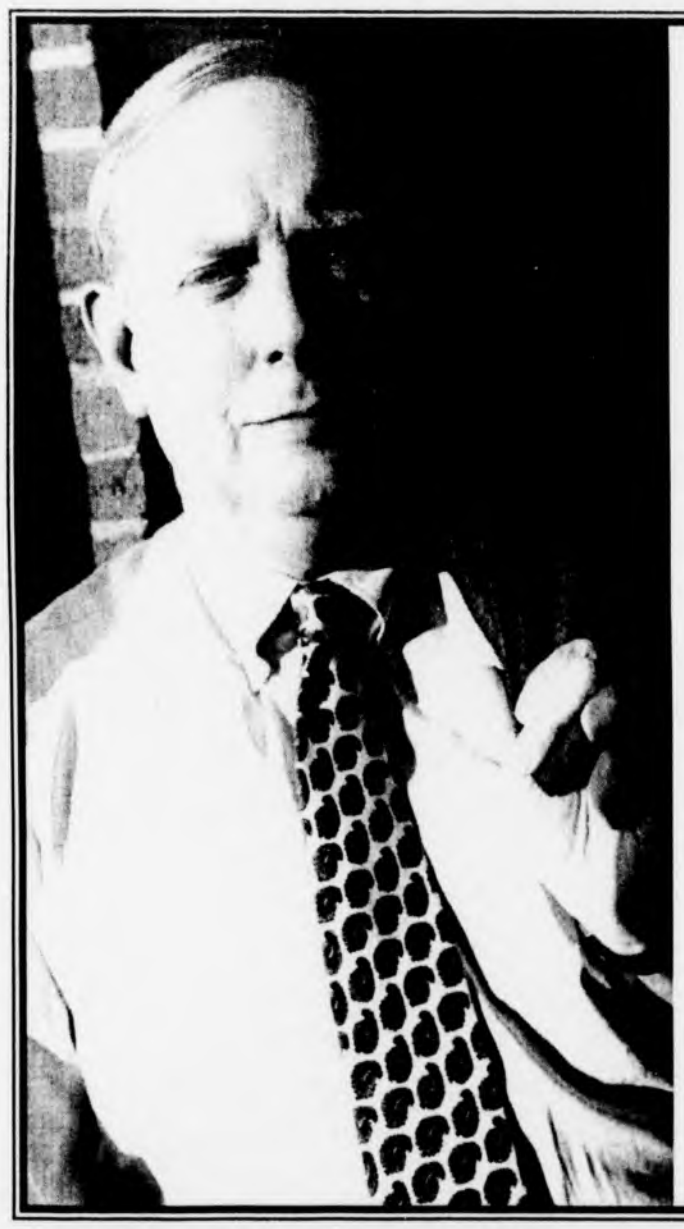
much of the first half. The score at the break was 26-0 in favor of Norwell.

During the second half, Cohasset finally got on the board, and the defense solidified and shut out the potent Clipper offense. Ends Laugelle and John Kasamayer, safety Hurley and linebackers Sasso and Greg Parkinson all played well on defense.

Hamilton registered seven tackles on the day.

Eventually, the offense began to click, behind the rejuvenated blocking of the offensive line and some gritty running by Hamilton and tailback Raheem Shepard.

Cohasset deked its way out of a punt situation, with Shepard taking the snap, and following his line, then made second and third efforts to reach the marker. However, the drive ended when Hurley found his receiver. But the ball bounced off the receiver's face mask directly to a Norwell defensive back.



Cohasset did score on an excellent play call. Hurley pitched to Shepard, who then fired a downfield bullet to Hurley, who caught the ball in tight coverage and dashed into the end zone to complete a 53-yard pass play. The two-point conversion failed, however, and the final score was 26-6.

The Skippers can take some consolation in the realization that Norwell beat up on every opponent this year and is bound for the Division 4 Super Bowl, regardless of Thanksgiving's game against a speedy Hanover team. However, Coach Bob Knurek was dissatisfied with his team's performance.

"Physically, we've competed with every team we've played against this year; it's our football skill that's lacking. How do we address this problem? We start off with higher expectations for practices, more off-season camps, and increased player motivation."

The Cohasset Skippers will travel to Hull for the traditional Thanksgiving Day game against the Pirates next Thursday at 10 a.m.

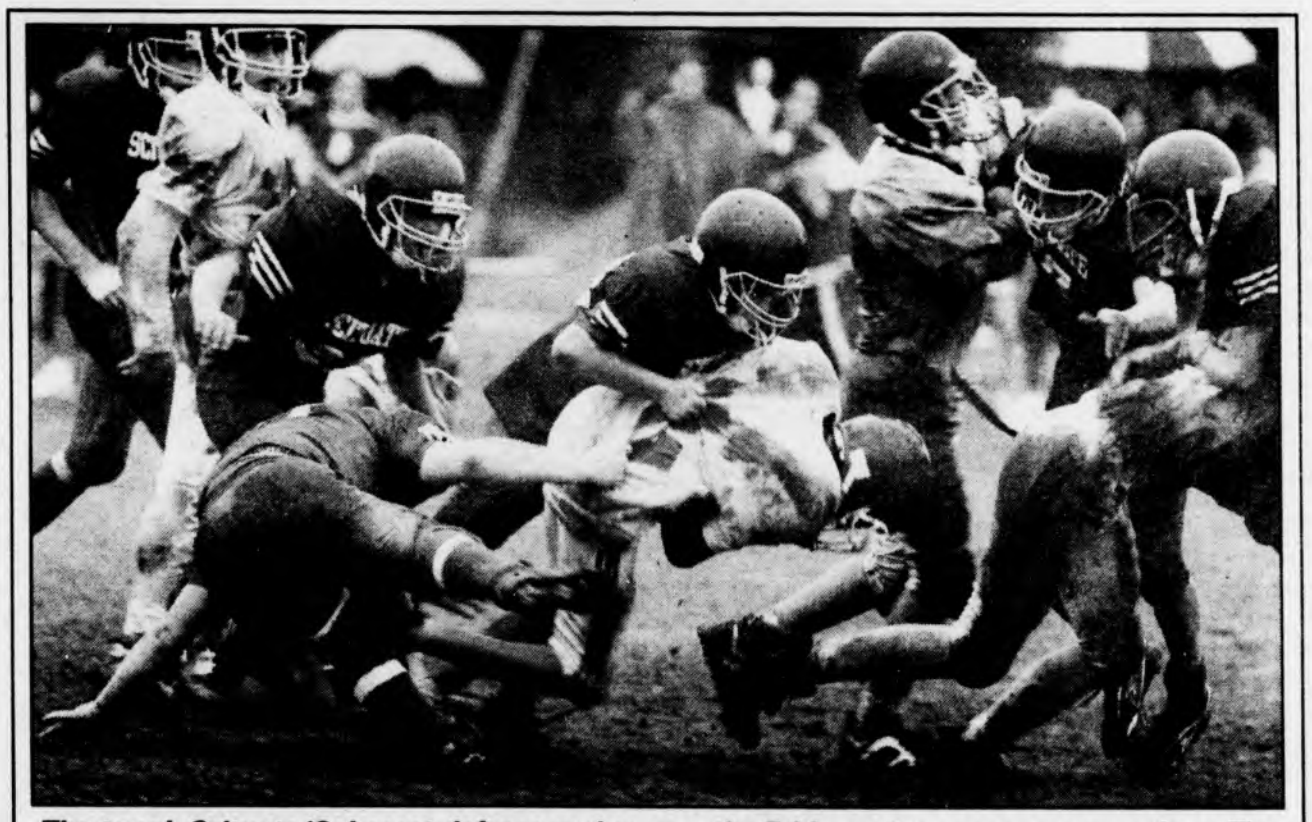
The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.



Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years.

Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away.

Basketball registration for boys and girls grades 1-8, is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 15, 9 a.m.-11 a.m., Town Hall.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

The tough Scituate/Cohasset defense makes sure the Bridgewater runner goes nowhere. The Midget squad took the Old Colony League youth football title on a recent weekend.

Diabetes — control is the key

By Esther Csapo Rastegari, RN, EdM
CORRESPONDENT

Diabetes. About 16 million people have it, about a third don't even know it. Could you be one of them? Ignoring distinctions of age and gender, diabetes strikes newborns through the elderly, and nearly equal numbers of men and women. It attracts almost 800,000 new customers every year, and claims about 190,000 lives each year as well (1995 CDC statistic). While listed as the seventh leading cause of death in 1995, the CDC believes deaths related to diabetes are underreported. More than 8 percent of those aged 20 or older have diabetes; nearly 20 percent of those 65 and older have diabetes. That's a lot of people! November is National Diabetes Awareness Month, so, let's find out more about it.

What is it? Diabetes is a medical disease in which the body is unable, or poorly able, to make and/or use insulin. Insulin is a hormone made (secreted) by the pancreas that helps bring glucose (blood sugar) into the cells for energy. Every time you eat, the blood glucose level rises. Without insulin, the glucose remains in the blood instead of moving into the cells. When the glucose level in the blood continually stays high, the blood vessels become thick and stiff over time. This leads to the complications listed below. All cells need glucose for energy and proper functioning. Therefore, with diabetes, every cell in the body is affected.

Ruth Abi-Kheirs shows her favorite machine for monitoring blood sugar levels to a customer at Marshfield's Osco Drug.

Who gets it? Most diabetics fall into one of three categories: type 1 (formerly called insulin-dependent or juvenile onset), type 2 (non-insulin dependent or adult-onset) and gestational (appearing during pregnancy). Type 1 diabetes typically affects children, adolescents or young adults. It is believed to be an auto-immune disease in which the body gradually starts to attack those cells in the pancreas (called islet or beta cells) that produce insulin. Eventually, these cells are destroyed and no insulin is made. Without insulin the body cannot function, and the individual would die. Therefore, people with type 1 diabetes must have daily injections of insulin to give the body what it needs to survive, but can no longer produce on its own. The insulin must be injected, as digestive enzymes in the stomach would destroy insulin in pill form. About five to 10 percent of diabetics have type 1 diabetes. That leaves 90 to 95 percent of diabetics with type 2 diabetes.

A full range of self-care products are on the shelves for diabetics.

What is type 2 diabetes? In type 2 diabetes the pancreas continues to make insulin, but it does not make as much as the body needs. The person may also be "insulin-resistant," which means that the insulin is unable to effectively bring the glucose into the cells. Type 2 diabetes is often preventable. For some diabetics, diet and exercise may be enough to control the disease. Others may need to take an "oral hypoglycemic agent." This is medication taken in pill form that helps the pancreas make more insulin and helps the body use insulin better.

What are the risk factors for type 2 diabetes?

- overweight by 20 percent or more (80 percent of type 2 diabetics are overweight)
- age 45 and above
- rarely engage in exercise (beware couch potatoes!)
- women who had gestational diabetes when pregnant
- having a parent, brother or sister with diabetes

How can I tell if I have diabetes? Here are some signs to look for:

- increased thirst
- increased urination
- weakness and fatigue
- repeated bladder and vaginal infections
- wounds that heal slowly or poorly
- African-American, Hispanic, Native American

Some people with type 2 diabetes have no symptoms at all. If you suspect you may have diabetes, it is very important to see your doctor as soon as possible. Diabetes has serious complications, and the more you are in control of your diabetes, the fewer and less severe the complications.

What are the long-term complications of diabetes? How serious are they?

- heart disease: two to four times the death rate of non-diabetics
- stroke: risk is two to four times higher for diabetics
- high blood pressure: 60 to 65 percent of diabetics have hypertension
- blindness: diabetes is the leading cause of blindness in 20- to 74-year olds
- kidney disease: in 1995 nearly 100,000 diabetics needed dialysis or a kidney transplant
- nerve damage: decreased sensation in feet and hands; slowed digestion
- amputation: more than half of all lower limb amputations are for diabetics
- male impotence

Still thinking diabetes is just a problem of "a little sugar?" Diabetes is a nasty disease, affecting every part of the body.

I have diabetes, how can I prevent these complications? There is good news on this front. The Joslin Diabetes Center in Boston was part of a research study called the Diabetes Control and Complication Trials. What they found was that the more the blood sugar was kept at or near normal levels, the fewer the complications, some by as much as 50 percent. Keeping blood sugars near normal levels requires frequent testing — perhaps four or more times a day: upon rising in the morning, after meals, after exercise and before bedtime. This way the insulin dosage can be more carefully tailored to the actual blood glucose level. Of course, any change in the way you handle your diabetes must be done with your physician.

"Cohassetopoly" ready for the holidays

The South Shore Community Center is selling the game, "Cohassetopoly." For $20 you will have the opportunity to own all the real estate and businesses you want in Cohasset. Proceeds will benefit the scholarship fund of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. The Junior Gardeners of this club worked all summer preparing this game. Quantities are limited. Call 383-0088 for more information.

Holiday house tour planned

Homes for the Holiday is the theme for this year's biennial house tour sponsored by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. Five beautifully decorated homes will be open for viewing Dec. 10 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. There will be a diversity of styles represented, including a riverside French country-style manor with a Great Hall living room and entrance turret and a 1790s post-and-beam house with the original twin chimneys. A 1780s Victorian residence with gingerbread detailing, a contemporary home set between a rocky ledge and water, and an English fieldstone country manor with impressive vistas of Massachusetts Bay and Cape Ann round out the tour. Free refreshments will be available at Bates Hall in the Second Congregational Church, including coffee and muffins from 10 a.m. to noon, and tea and holiday cookies from noon to 4 p.m. The Octet from the Broad Cove Chorale, under the direction of Margo Euler, will perform a capella carols and close harmony songs of the season in mid-afternoon at several of the homes.

Tickets for the tour are available at the South Shore Community Center at 3 North Main St. in Cohasset. The phone number is (781) 383-0088. If purchased in advance, the tickets are $15 and on the day of the tour they are $20. This year the community center is sponsoring a lunch which can be purchased for $5 from 11:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Proceeds from the house tour will be used to support the numerous civic projects of the Garden Club, which include historic restoration and preservation, civic beautification, scholarship grants and community education programs. The club also contributes time and money to various environmental and conservation agencies.

South Shore Art Center celebrates Mexican tradition, artistry

Brandon Gayton, 12, particpates in one of the Mexican folk art workshops during the art center's Dia de los Muertos.

Last week's blustery, pre-winter weather caught many of us by surprise, triggering Friday night cancellations and postponements of weekend plans. But the hearty souls at the South Shore Art Center, in true New England fashion, refused to be swayed by a bit of slushy sleet and driving rain. The center's Dia de los Muertos (Day of the Dead) Fiesta scheduled for 4 p.m. Friday and the 6 p.m. opening reception for the joint exhibition of Diamantina Gonzalez Gomez's "Earth, Myth and Soil" and Juan Alberto Mancilla's "Times in New York" continued as planned, with just a few minor adjustments. An intended procession for the art center to a local graveyard was canceled, for obvious reasons.

Somehow the evening's stormy weather seemed a fitting tribute to the true guests of the Day of the Dead Fiesta — dearly departed ancestors and friends of art center patrons and staff remembered with more than a dozen festively decorated "altars," lining the Dillon Gallery.

A popular Mexican celebration that begins Oct. 27 when the souls of the dead visit their villages and finishes three days later after their return to the hereafter, el Dia de los Muertos, combines two opposing views of death: the European belief that death is to be feared and resisted and the easy acceptance of death by the indigenous people who regard it as an entry to another existence.

Tom Lucas, a South Shore Art Center gallery artist and Cohasset resident who also maintains a vacation home in Oaxacs, Mexico, clearly captures the character of Mexican life in his artwork. "Offerings," painted in vivid golden yellow and vibrant red tones depicts two Mexican women preparing a food and drink laden altar. "Wild Night Fiesta" portrays the action-filled party atmosphere that brings the Day of the Dead to a close.

Lucas' altar, honoring his own deceased relatives, stood alongside one entitled "Spirits in Transformation," created by the eighth-grade class of Jack Packard of the Cohasset Middle School. The table featured student sculptures of life-like food and drink meant to replenish the souls of the dead. Packard added his own personal touches, photographs of his parents and a fondly remembered summer home.

A vintage brocade purse, evening gloves, reading glasses and old photographs leant yesteryear character to the altar of the SSAC staff while hand-painted masks, the handiwork of Braintree residents Lupe and Laurie Gaytan and their four children, projected a more youthful feeling.

Sixth-graders from the Deer Hill School paid tribute to the merchants of the Day of the Dead with a Street Vendor Booth, covered with ghoulishly painted ceramic pins and colorful "protection plaques," decorated with glitter, beads and tiny plastic skeletons.

Traditional pan de muerto (bread of the dead) and Ojos de Dios (God's eyes) made from yarn and wooden sticks were a few of the offerings on the altar of the students of Virginia Lima and Marilyn Brennan, Spanish teachers at Scituate High. Artist Diamantina Gonzalez Gomez oversaw the students' Mexican creations with also included delicate papel picado (intricate designs cut out of colored tissue paper).

A group of teenagers who attend the SSAC's Creative Expression Open Studio three evenings a week, offered the visiting dead a combination of work reflecting the visual arts and creative writing. "Death is the sunset" read one of the poems. "This is for everyone who has ever lived and who will live," said another.

El Dia de los Muertos, combines two opposing views of death: the European belief that death is to be feared and resisted and the easy acceptance of death by the indigenous people who regard it as an entry to another existence.

Also on display in the Dillon Gallery were landscapes and scenes of San Miguel, Mexico painted during a visit to the town by Cohasset artist Ros Farbush and his students Mary Good, Anne Lane, Mary Lizotte, Marge Murphy, Lynn Titleman Rizzotto and Arlene Weeks. Nancy Cusack's photographs of Oaxaca, Mexico paid further tribute to the beauty and tradition of Mexican life.

Sharing traditions: Mexico Old and New is the theme of the exhibition in the SSAC's Bancroft Gallery, on display until Dec. 21. Diamantina Gonzalez Gomez's series "Earth, Myth and Soil" includes 22 boldly rendered paintings, using an encaustic approach and strong orange, black and gold tones which beg the viewer's touch.

"Color, light and physical materials make up my voice," says Gonzalez Gomez. "These are the elements that unify all my series, which I consider autobiographical. Large format paintings may whisper or yell my conditions as a woman, weaknesses, strengths, relationships and physical condition. Small format paintings represent a more intimate aspect of myself, directly related to femininity and spirituality. The use of earth and wax yields a corporeal quality analogous to my skin and tactile sensitivity common to many women."

"'Times in New York' is a series of works that includes paintings, prints an drawings," says artist Juan Alberto Mancilla. "I try to express the multi-cultural environment and the multiplicity of images and ideas that New York City offers by using images from different times and cultures. I use some very well known icons that identify this cosmopolitan city: logos of American trademarks, NYC transportation maps and symbols, rubbings of NYC manhole covers. I also appropriate some images that come from different artists' works and art periods and include others that are related to personal experiences. The result is my perception of New York City and its leading role in the art world."

Mancilla's exhibition includes nine pieces reflecting a multitude of media such as rubbing, drippings and graffiti as well as material including canvas, wood and plastic.

The SSAC will round out its tribute to Mexican culture with a Mexican Fiesta on Friday, Nov. 21 at 7 p.m. at the center. The evening will feature a Mariachi band, Latin dancing demonstrations, Mexican food and drink, and of course, Mexican art. Tickets are $55 per person. For more information, call 383-ARTS.

Juan Alberto Mancilla positions a wet sheet of paper over the image before printing it at a special art center workshop last Saturday.

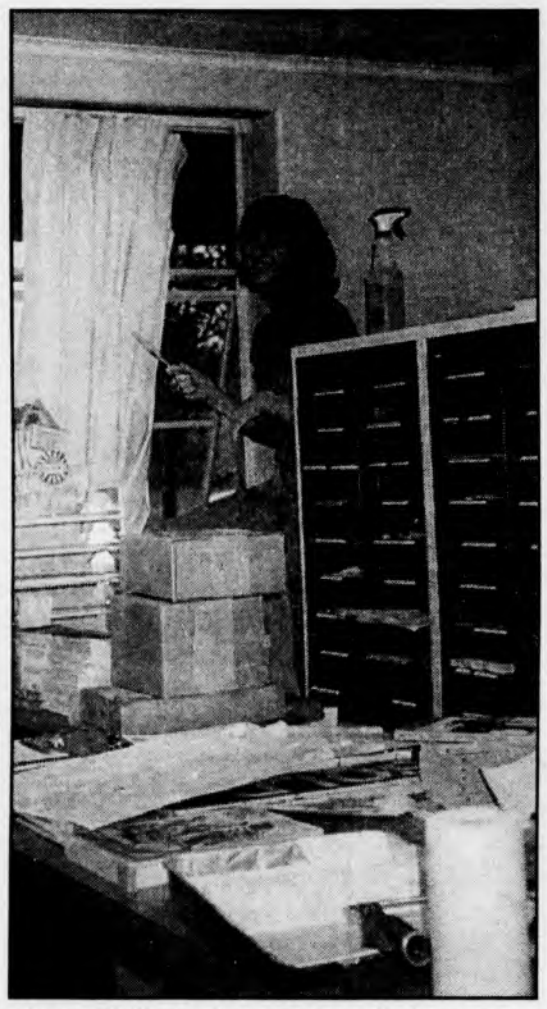
Parents make a difference at the Deer Hill School

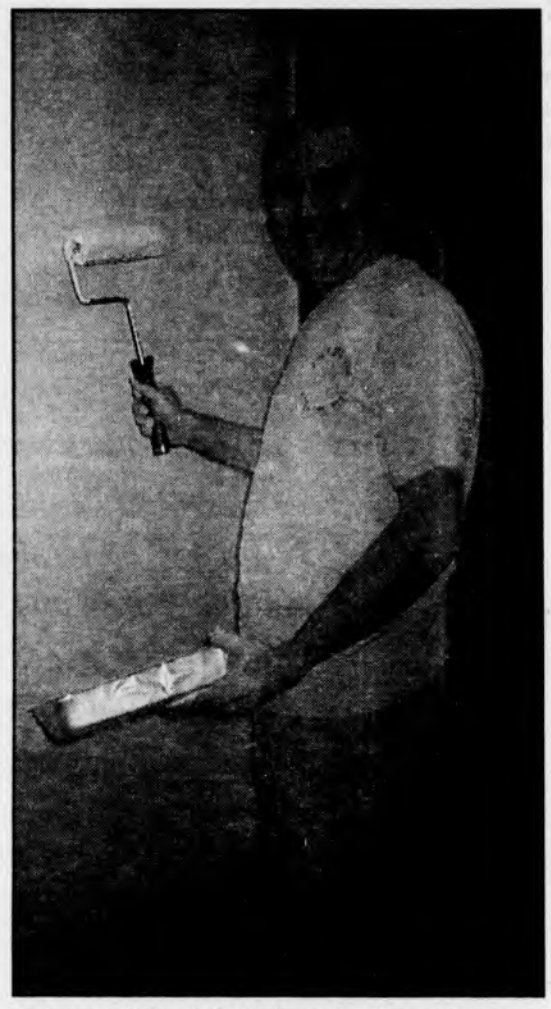
The second annual "Make a Difference Day" was held Saturday, Nov. 1 at the Deer Hill School. Principal Paul Callahan led a small band of dedicated parents and staff as they spruced up several offices and classrooms.



Inclement weather kept the project work indoors for the most part, although Ann Musto and several little Mustos did a great job of outside landscaping before the rains really came down.

Once again, Mary Sullivan and the PSO provided breakfast and lunch for the workers. Many thanks to Atlantic Bagel for their generous donation of bagels and cream cheese for the event.

Thank you to all who donated their time and talents to this endeavor. Another "Make a Difference Day" is planned for the spring when hopefully better weather will prevail.



School committee member Rick Shea is hard at work painting the walls in the foyer.

Jean Hajjar paints some windows at Deer Hill.

Susan Turgiss helps with the clean up.

Principal Paul Callahan is all smiles as he paints the office walls.

DRUG FACTS

Taxes on alcoholic beverages provide a major source of revenue for the United States Government and state and local governments. About 65 percent of federal and state revenue comes from the sales of "spirits." "Spirits" i.e. liquor i.e. distilled drinks include brandy, gin, rum, vodka, and whiskey. Americans drink about 430 million gallons of "spirits" annually. This does not include the five billion gallons of beer and the 400 million gallons of wine drunk annually. There are approximately 250+ million people in the United States. Taxes and other fees make up more than half the price of a bottle of spirits.

No speed signs for Beechwood

Town Manager Mark Haddad said there are no speed limit signs on Beechwood Street and it ought to stay that way.

Currently there is no posting order for the street, he said. Haddad explained that before speed limits can be set, a survey would have to be filed with the state. He said that based on prior police surveys, the speed limit would have to be posted at 40 m.p.h. If the street is not posted, the town can enforce a 30 m.p.h. speed limit.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said police would beef up radar patrols on Beechwood. The matter was raised last week by Selectman Ronnie McMorris who said cars are going too fast on Beechwood Street.

Illegal use of drugs, alcohol focus of task forces

By Stacey Powers
CORRESPONDENT

Police Chief Brian Noonan took center stage at the Nov. 12 Drug & Alcohol Committee meeting to talk about creating a police narcotic and dangerous drug investigative unit. The unit will be committed to identify, investigate and prosecute drug offenders through the department's involvement with the South Shore Drug Task Force and the Norfolk County District Attorney's Community Drug Action Response Team or CDART.

Office Gregory Lennon will act as liaison to the volunteer task forces which Noonan said the department joined to "utilize the equipment and manpower of all the forces in the county to supplement Cohasset's currently available law enforcement resources."

To date in 1997, Noonan said Cohasset police have made 171 arrests, of those arrested 45 were under 21 (five under 17) of which 11 were drug related and 27 were alcohol related.

In a letter to the committee, Noonan explained the new unit "will accomplish its goals by recognizing the multi-jurisdictional nature of illegal drug distribution by coordinating its efforts with and becoming participating members of the two drug task forces currently operating within this jurisdiction." He stressed that the anti-drug efforts will be ineffective without the support and assistance of the community.

Cohasset man has piece of Nobel Peace Prize

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset native Jerry White, co-founder of Landmine Survivors Network, is off to Norway next month, as one of about 100 invited to the Nobel Peace Prize award ceremony.

The Nobel Peace Prize is being presented Dec. 10 to the International Campaign to Ban Landmines (ICBL) and to its campaign coordinator Jody Williams.

The Landmine Survivors Network (LSN) is a big spoke in the wheel that consists of about 1,000 non-government organizations worldwide dedicated to banning land mines. LSN also sits on the nine-member steering committee of the U.S. Campaign to Ban Landmines along with other organizations such as the Boston-based Physicians for Human Rights and Vietnam Veterans of America Foundation in Washington, D.C.

White — who lost part of his right leg after stepping on a land mine while on a hiking trip in Israel in 1984 — said being offered two seats at the ceremony is an acknowledgment that LSN, as the original voice of survivors, played a central role in the effort to ban land mines. One of White's associates, Kamel Sa'adi

Homeowners plan septic powwow

Property owners to meet Dec. 5

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

It might have been billed as a done deal, but opposition is nonetheless mounting to a plan to start a mandatory On-Site Wastewater Management District.

Following discussions at recent health board meeting, some of the property owners on Nichols Road have organized a meeting the evening of Dec. 5 in Town Hall to review their legal options. The group is part of the small minority of more than 100 homeowners whose property has been tied up in the OWMD as part of an amended legal agreement struck by the Cohasset Sewer Commission and the state to clean up Cohasset's wastewater problems.

Yet though the solution is for the whole town, property owners in only two "priority" areas are impacted (one near the municipal water source by Lily Pond and the other encompassing the Cohasset triangle along Jerusalem and Nichols Road and Atlantic Avenue near Little Harbor.)

In all, about 136 homeowners in the OWMD would be subject to mandatory Title V septic system inspections, on a recurring seven-year cycle. Current regulations, in contrast, call for the sometimes onerous inspections, which can cost up to $1,000, only when a failed septic system is reported or before a property can be sold, according to health board member Kevin Ulmer.

"It is a done deal, and we're re-

Huts are history

Condos to replace Quonset structures

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Residents of South Main Street have agreed for decades that a series of Quonset huts on their street are the ugliest buildings in Cohasset. But that's all about to change, and someone will have to nominate a new building as the ugliest structure in Cohasset.

Last week the zoning board of appeals approved a developers plan to raze the Quonset huts and build five condominiums in three buildings on the site.

One South Main Street resident who was thrilled with the zoning board decision nominated the old Brockton Edison building as the new ugliest structure in Cohasset.

The owner of the Quonset huts, attorney Noel Collins,

Traffic rules to get upgrade

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's traffic rules include quiet zones and when roads can be closed for coasting.

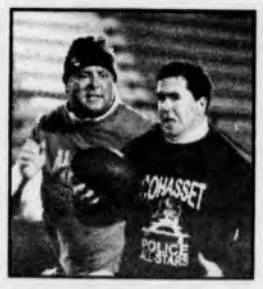
While full of those and other nostalgic reminders of a simpler time, the regulations which date back to 1946 are in dire need of modernizing.

To that end, the newly formed traffic committee met last week and decided to tackle the "Town of Cohasset — Traffic Rules and Orders" section by section as its first order of business.

They will also incorporate any changes to the traffic rules that have been adopted in recent years.

"The Chief of Police may temporarily establish a zone of quiet upon any street where a person is seriously ill, if requested to do so by the written statement of at least one registered physician certifying to its necessity..."

— TRAFFIC RULES AND ORDER, 1946.



Safety Officer Clifton Jones had a folder full of letters and memos on approved traffic safety improvements.

"This hodgepodge needs to be put in some semblance of order," Jones said about the stack of letters.

The group will also look at replacing the "No U-Turn" signs in the village with more visible ones that depict the international symbol prohibiting U-

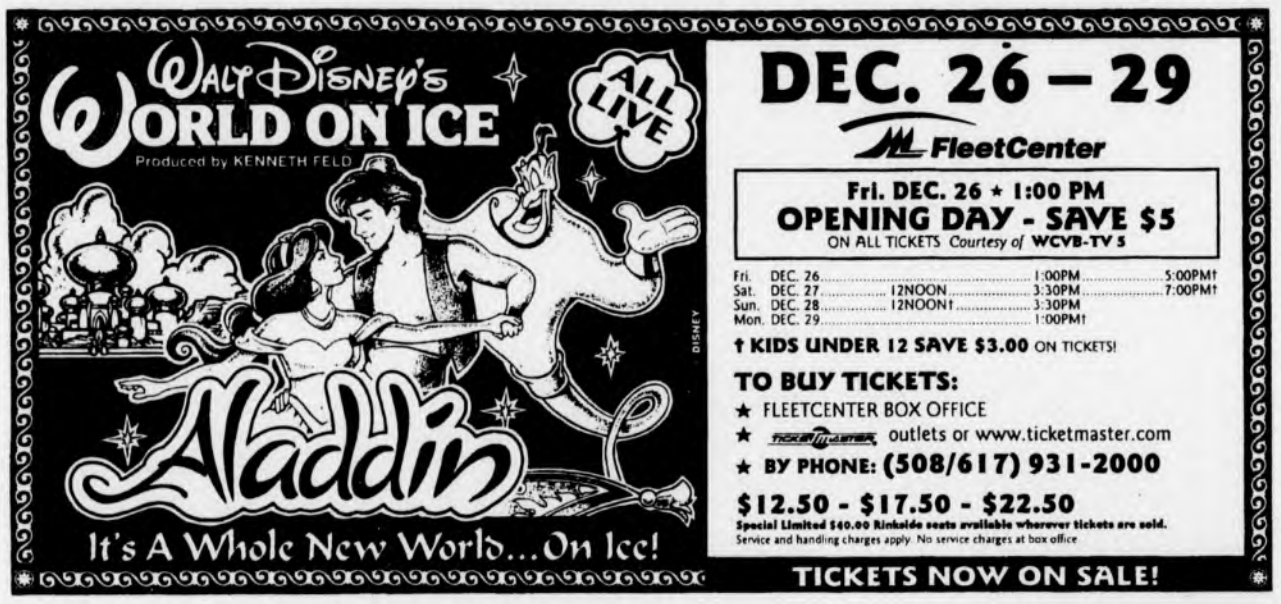
Oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled



Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street.. "We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Public reading packet available

In an effort to promote communcation, the school department will provide a public reading packet and make if available to local citizens, the school board said last week.

The packet, which will be available in the superintendent's office, will contain recent correspondence and other documents. There will also be an index of documents including items such as teacher contracts and school handbooks, so people will know how to access those.

Buddy Roche was a plant supervisor at Boston City Hospital for 35 years, was married for 37 years, had four children – and collected more than 1,500 baseball caps.

"I haven't done everything I wanted to do in life," Buddy said just before he died. "But I haven't missed much either."

Faced with terminal bone cancer, Buddy decided to spend his last months at home, with the help of his family and Hospice of the South Shore. "I wouldn't want to be anyplace else," he said.

"Hospice provides so much more than nursing," said Buddy's daughter, Mary. "They provide comfort. They completely dedicate themselves to you. I'm a registered nurse, and I couldn't have taken care of my Dad without them. They knew exactly when to manage his pain. And when he was free from pain, he was back to being Dad again."

"It's more than a medical situation, it becomes a friendship," said Kevin, Buddy's son. "Anytime we called – day or night – Hospice of the South Shore always responded."

Deer Hill students knit hats for homeless

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF REPORTER

During many a fair weather recess at the Deer Hill School, a number of the youngsters are skipping their regular games in favor of knitting. To date, the middle school students have produced 120 hats to be donated to the homeless at the Boston shelter Rosie's Place.

Peter Bunstein, 10, spoke of casting Monday in much the same tones the Cohasset fishermen have used.

But Peter,, like many men of the sea before him, was knitting, not fishing.

Fifth-grader Peter Bunstein knits a hat in the Deer Hill School art room.

Moreover, he's not the only boy at the Deer Hill School who is handy with the sticks.

Though sometimes linked with women's work, knitting, according to art teacher Ann Berman, was started by men to repair the nets on fishing boats. Today, when the Deer Hill students cast yarn on a knitting needle, they also pick up a strand from Cohasset's seafaring past, Berman said, as she described a recess scene that veered on something timeless.

"They sit at the picnic tables, boys and girls together, and it makes me think this is how things could have been 100 years ago."

Instead of playing games during recess, many of the 330 in the student body knit, making hats for the homeless. The project culminates Dec. 9 when the school delivers the gifts to the Boston homeless shelter Rosie's Place.

"It just took off like wildfire," Berman said, after she mentioned the idea the first week of school in September. "It got bigger than me. Quickly. It's just going to be a tradition," the teacher predicted.

About 200 youngsters have participated, as well as numerous parents and teachers, and though many learned to knit recently, there are some veterans, too.

Peter, who has already completed five hats, provided one such experienced hand with knitting, though he only got motivated after Berman suggested the school work on hats for Rosie's Place, he said.

"My Aunt Betty had taught me how to knit, but I thought there's really not much point in doing it," Peter allowed.

But once the prospect of making hats for the homeless turned up, he changed his mind.

"It's different to do it for homeless people," he said.

The story was similar for Andrew Flynn, also 10.

"I think it's nice to help the poor people," Andrew said.

Andrew, who just started knitting three weeks ago, is on his second hat. He got interested when he saw math and science teacher Roger Bourassa knitting, he said.

For Andrew, without doubt, knitting is "people stuff," and not women's work, and the main idea is helping others.

With that kind of positive attitude, Berman said she is confident the knitting tradition will continue at Deer Hill, though perhaps to benefit a different charity next year.

"They don't know how wonderful they're being," Berman said about her charges.

"This whole project takes place after school and on their own time. This is enrichment in the true sense of the word."

Sixth-grader Megan Marr models one of several hats she knitted for Rosie's Place.

Condos to replace Quonset structures

plans to tear down all the buildings and construct five condominiums in three buildings: two with two units and one single-unit.

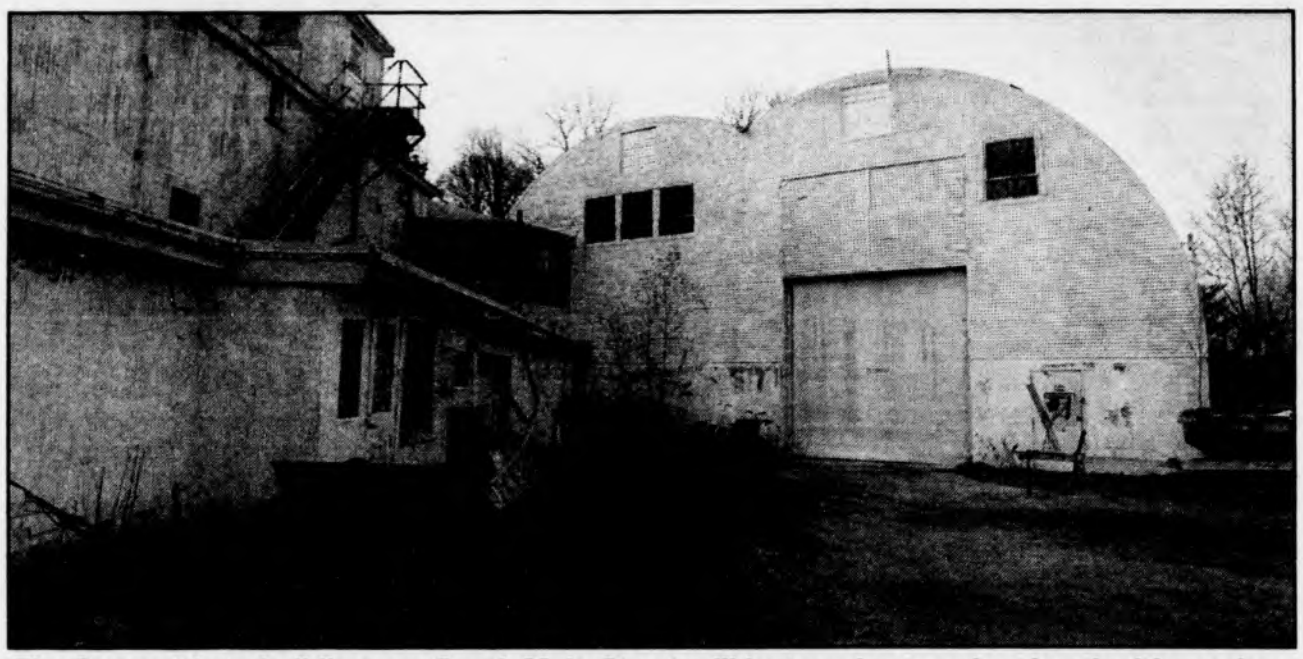
Collins said he has several interested buyers and could begin tearing down the buildings by Christmas. He added that it was more likely that demolition would begin next spring.

Collins now needs the health board to approve the septic system for the three buildings. The board of health was scheduled to consider Collins' plan Tuesday night after The Mariner went to press.

The conservation commission has issued an order of conditions that supports Collins' latest plan.

The planning board has also approved Collins' plan.

The zoning board decision ends a battle by residents to remove the Quonset huts that dates back almost 40 years.



Collins said he was very pleased with the zoning board's decision.

"The zoning board was struck by the design which changes the project so it appears as three single-family homes," Collins said. "It took a year longer than I anticipated, but the result was worth the wait. The project could not have been done without the help of all the town's boards."

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said five units was a favorable compromise.

DeGiacomo said five units would be far superior to 10, especially in terms of density on the site. Current zoning regulations allow for only one home on the site, but condominiums are unique.

"The final project appears to be a lot less dense, and I think and hope it will be an attractive addition to the neighborhood," DeGiacomo said. "It was a long process that took a lot of time, and it was very emotional for the neighbors, but once it's done I think everyone will look back and agree that this was a good compromise."

The Quonset huts buildings on South Main Street will be torn down and replaced with condos.

Collins has enjoyed good support from neighbors eager to get rid of the Quonset huts. He said the neighbors were very pleased with the zoning board's decision.

And the neighbors agree. Corinne Cahill lives on South Main Street just two houses over from the Quonset huts, and is part of a neighborhood group of about 15 families eager to eliminate the structures.

"We've all been working on this for a very long time and this is the answer to our prayers," Cahill said. "This is the best Christmas present we've ever received."

Collins bought the 54,000-square-foot lot in 1996 hoping to convert it from a commercial site to 10 residential condominiums.

The property is a non-conforming use, zoned commercial in a primarily residential neighborhood. Because the buildings predate zoning regulations, the property was "grandfathered" and allowed to remain a commercial use. A number of different commercial businesses have used the location for decades. Currently, Collins maintains a law office at the site and rents space to six tenants.

But the zoning board opposed 10 units because it would place too many units on such a small piece of land. The zoning board rejected Collins' request in November 1996.

Collins appealed the decision to Norfolk Superior Court, although he tried to settle the matter out of court, asking for six units instead of 10. Zoning board members favored four units, and refused to budge. Then Collins offered five units as another compromise, and the zoning board finally agreed.

The homes will be New England-style colonials in the $350,000 to $400,000 range.

The two double units will be on a 1,240-square-foot building footprint, and the single-family will be on a 980-square-foot building footprint.

The three buildings will occupy an area that is 10 percent smaller than the Quonset huts, preserving some open space.

Each building will have clapboards, peaked roofs, porches, brick chimneys, shutters, three floors with garages on the first level and architecture consistent with the neighborhood.

The planning board tried to rezone the site earlier this year so Collins could build 10 condominiums, but voters at the 1997 spring town meeting rejected the proposal. Members of the conservation commission said the change in bylaws would have stripped them of their jurisdiction over the nearby flood plain.

The land sits on the edge of the water and should offer a beautiful landscape for residents, according to Collins.

"These are going to be stunning buildings on a stunning site," Collins said.

of Jordan who at 15 years old lost a leg to a land mine, will accompany him to Oslo. "It's a wonderful thing to be invited to the Nobel ceremony," said White who lives in Washington with his wife and four children. But he is quick to point out that while being recognized is nice — there is a lot more work to be done. "Before we all raise our champagne flutes," he said, "let's make sure those in countries held hostage to land mines feel the difference." Before Oslo, White first heads to Ottawa Dec. 4-6 for the signing to the international treaty to ban land mines. While there he has been asked to pay tribute to the late Princess of Wales. Britain's Princess Diana drew attention to the scourge of land mines on her trips to Angola and Bosnia earlier this year. White and his partner, Ken Rutherford another amputee, met the late princess at the land-mine conference in June where she was the keynote speaker. She later chose LSN to host her three-day visit to Bosnia in August where she went house-to-house visiting land-mine survivors and their families. LSN, founded in 1995, is dedicated to helping the thousands of land-mine victims alive today.

White said he hopes the all the attention surrounding the Nobel Prize will help draw attention to LSN's mission. "The reason we formed the Landmine Survivors Network is to make a difference on the ground," he said. The Nobel Peace Prize is awarded annually to those whose work during the preceding year has been of the greatest benefit to mankind.

White is a Cohasset High graduate. His mother, Mimi White, lives on Sheldon Road.

For more information on how you can help land-mine victims, please contact LSN , 700 13th St. NW, Suite 950, Washington, D.C. 20005. Email: LSN@landminesurvivors.org. Website: www.landminesurvivors.org.

Osgood School prepares Native American Thanksgiving

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF REPORTER

The instant the fresh orange zest scratched the grater, the Osgood School halls smelled like Thanksgiving was near. But when the carrots, the maple syrup and the cream style corn cascaded into the mixing bowls, the mounting signs of the feast had second-grader Chris Rose, 7, patting his tummy.

"It's going to taste good," agreed McKenna Teague, 7, who was assigned to the corn pudding detail with classmate Jackie Cahill, 8. Though neither sounded too sure about the pudding ingredients, when the time came to make cranberry bread for the second grade's Thanksgiving feast, their classmate Emily Runy needed but little help from the adults.

"I already know how to do it," the seven-year old said, turning a wooden spoon neatly through the lumps of white cake mix.

Emily, McKenna, Jackie and Chris were among the youngsters Monday who tried a hand at measurements and recipes, under the expert eye of cooks like teacher Rosalie Collins and parent volunteer Ann Stenbeck.

The parents helping youngsters cook up the holiday feast came from the ranks of more than 100 volunteers who enrich the school classrooms throughout the year

According to Collins, without the parent volunteers, the class of 22 would probably have had to settle for mostly talking about the first Thanksgiving, rather than digging into the recipes the Pilgrims learned from Maushop and Quant.

Yet, the Thanksgiving Feast is but one of many ways the parents contribute, Collins said.

" The staff wanted to say thank-you to all the parent volunteers since this is our last year here at the Osgood School," the teacher said, " and we are celebrating 75 years at Osgood." (The Osgood School is in its last year in the present building on Ripley Road, while a new school is being built.)

Whether they are helping with a cooking exercise or math and science, the parent volunteers make a positive difference in the quality of the children's education. Moreover, with classes numbering over 20 students in all the grades at Osgood, the second grade teacher said, the teachers would not otherwise be able to grapple with the logistics of guiding their charges through hands-on learning projects in art, computers, and even publishing.

Parent volunteer Jean Muir helps her son Kenny cut up vegetables for the Osgood Thanksgiving feast while Robert Troy wipes onion induced tears from his eyes.

Monday, six mothers helped Collins out with the Thanksgiving Feast preparations in her room, such as Diane Shipp. As a "room mother," she has volunteered frequently because she wanted to be part of her son' Alexander's education.

"I want him to see me at school and know that I see it as valuable," Shipp said.

As for the youngsters, Chris Rose summed up the pleasure of having a parent come to volunteer and said it made a youngster feel like a special person.

Cohasset boaters cool to pump-out program

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Despite weak participation this summer, a state official has high hopes a new pumpout program will eventually hook Cohasset boaters.

"I have great hopes next year Cohasset harbor will be a lot cleaner than it was before this equipment arrived," said Buell Hollister, the Clean Vessel Act grant coordinator.

Moreover, because the Clean Vessel Act is due to expire this year, the official is hoping the legislature will move to re-authorize the program.

"We need to keep a flow of cash going to maintain it," he said.

Hollister is collecting data on the program's success statewide and this week he acknowledged the first season is not enough time to judge if the program is working. Overall, the program is in its third year, though this boating season was the first time it has been used in Cohasset. The general pattern, he said, has been a change in attitude among boaters who "by and large want to do the right thing," he said.

"When the program first started, a lot of people said we really needed to enforce this," Hollister said.

Nonetheless, it has appeared to be peer pressure, not penalties, that has motivated people to use the pump, Hollister said, even though it is still legal to dump certain types of waste outside the three-mile limit.

According to Harbor Master John Winters, of the 425 crafts in Cohasset Harbor, only 20-25 boats tied up with the special pumping boat.

Yet according to Harbor Master John Winters, of the 425 crafts in Cohasset Harbor, only 20-25 boats tied up with the special pumping boat. The boat has a tank inside and a pump that extracts wastewater from the sanitary stations on board the pleasure boats.

Winters estimated he pumped a total of 400 gallons from June through the end of the season, even though the program is free and was advertised extensively.

Nonetheless, Winters was not discouraged. "It will take hold," the harbor master predicted. "We just got the boat this year."

Under the grant program, the state provides 75 percent of the cost of the boat as well as 75 percent of the operational costs, including dockage, Winters said.

According to Hollister, the money to fund the programs comes from a tax on fishing reels, gear and outboard motors, and the ten percent tax is collected through the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Traffic rules to get upgrade turns. (It is illegal in the village to make a U-turn into an angled parking space on the opposite side of South Main Street).

"That way it won't matter if you speak nothing by Russian, you know what that means," said Jones, who was elected as the committee's chairman.

The traffic committee wants to focus initially on the center of town. There was some talk about how to make the pedestrian crosswalks user friendly. Members recalled the portable signs of about five years ago didn't work because they had to be put away at night. Cars also hit and damaged them.

The crosswalk in front of the South Shore Community Center at 3 N. Main St. was singled out as one that needs safety improvement. Pole mounted pedestrian cross-walk signs, like the one in front of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, were mentioned as a possible option.

Members of the committee are: Jones, Selectman Merle Brown, Mike Barry, Page Liberty and Heidi Salerno.

The next traffic committee meeting is at 7:30 p.m., Dec. 18.

AROUND TOWN

EXCITING TIMES AHEAD

Exciting times are ahead for our little town of Cohasset, the Christmas season is rushing upon us. With the season comes events that people look forward to, and those involved in bringing these to you have asked me to release this information to you so that you might again plan your time around them: first of all, on Dec. 6, 10a.m.-3p.m. is the Cohasset Village Fair entitled "All Around Cohasset Common".

"Visit with Santa" is being brought to you by the Cohasset/Appalachia Service Project, they will be taking instant photos of tiny petitioners to the delight of parents.

The Second Congregational Church will be the setting of its annual boutique, bake sale and chowder bar; The Unitarian Parish House will repeat its annual jumble sale and Swedish coffee shop (featuring freshly baked cinnamon buns by Sine Pounder of Cohasset's The Bread Shop Fame and coffee.

Located in the town hall will be the selling of wreaths and swags that members of the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox have embellished in the weeks before the fair, as well as presenting a bargain bazaar, a boutique of holiday gift items, and an array of tempting Greek pastries and delicacies; Saint Stephen's Episcopal Church will hold a book and bake sale, along with a silent auction and baked goods and fresh greens arrangements—also it will have the children's secret room, where the kiddies may purchase inexpensive Christmas gifts "all by themselves".

As you can see, this has been an event that has been in the works for months, and people from all over the South Shore come to partake in it. Don't be left out! Oh yes, it sounds as though it might be a good idea to diet for a few days before attending, what yummy food is in store for you!

MR. BEAR'S CHRISTMAS

Also, on Dec. 6, at 10:30a.m. the South Shore Community Center is hosting "Mr. Bear's Christmas", a theatrical production from the N.H. Theatre Project's "HA'PENNY THEATRE." Tickets are on sale now through Dec. 2 and will be $6, after that they will be $8. Call the Center at 383-0088 for more information and tickets. The Mural prototype at Paul Pratt library will also be raffled to benefit friends of Paul Pratt library - tickets on sale at Butonwood Books, $5 each.

HOLIDAY HOUSE TOUR

Next, the photo that you see is a harbinger of things to come for the Community Garden Club of Cohasset's "Home for the Holidays House Tour". Left to right in the photo are Lee Androski, Lelia Weinstein, and Susan Callahan are busily setting up this biennial event. Maura Ditmar and Peggy Lovallo are the co-chairs who have been working for months coordinating everything—five homes will be on the tour including a French Country style main house, a Victorian residence, a New England Colonial, a contemporary overlooking the water, and an English fieldstone country manor. A feature added to this year's tour is a lunch sponsored by the South Shore Community Center for $5 from 11:30a.m.-3p.m. at the Center. The club is requesting that adults only come on this tour and that everyone chooses footwear that is comfortable and that will protect the homes visited. Free rnts, freshments will be availab throughout the day at Bates Hall in the Second Congregational Church, and the Octet from the Broad Cover Chorale will perform carols a capella and close harmony songs of the season in mid-afternoon at several of the homes. Proceeds from the house tour will be used to support the numerous civic projects of the Garden Club. The date is Wednesday, Dec. 10, form 10a.m.-4p.m. Advanced tickets are $15 or $20 tour day rate. Plan on going, this widely acclaimed event cannot be missed!

OOPS!

Boy did I make a huge mistake recently when we welcomed Bob Healy home from the hospital—it was Tom that was ill. Notice I say was, he is out and about and looking fantastic. Even driving! Sorry, Tom but glad to see you are well again.

SHOP LOCALLY

With the holiday season upon us, one is reminded to shop locally. One family owned business comes to mind, King Jewelers—they have been in business for 76 years, and June (the main mom) and Valerie and Vicki (also moms) have made sue that nothing but the best is in their store. June is in charge of giftware and restringing pearls and beads, Val runs the business end and is marketing and advertising person and Vicki is the store's diamond buyer. The store is elegant, as are the contents, the people are all wonderful, and you can find tons of treasures there. Check it out!

SANDCASTLES FIELD TRIP

SandCastles Pre-K and Preschool had a wonderful time last month, they went on a field trip to Steverman's Farm. They went by school bus (seemingly one of the highlights of the day according to the pictures the children drew), they met "the farmer", and they had a great time in the pumpkin patch! Owner Lynn Durkin makes sure that the students have great things to do all of the time, she is one enthusiastic person. And do the kiddies love it. Wonder what they'll be doing for the Thanksgiving holiday. We'll let you know.

CALL WITH NEWS

You be sure to let us know all about your Thanksgiving, okay? With your college student home, that" surely full of news. . .relative that come to visit, anything is of interest to us. Give me a call at 383-0560

Happy Thanksgiving!

"Our harvest being gotten in, our Governor sent four men on fowling; that so we might, after a more special manner, rejoice together, after we had gathered the fruit of our labours.

"They four, in one day, killed as much fowl as, with a little help besides, served the Company almost a week. At which time, amongst other recreations, we exercised our Arms; many of the Indians coming amongst us.

"And, amongst the rest, their greatest King, Massasoyt, with some ninety men; whom for three days, we entertained and feasted. And they went out, and killed five deer; which they brought to the Plantation; and bestowed on our Governor and upon the Captain and others."

Thus, one member of the Company at Plymouth Plantation, Edward Winslow, described the first Thanksgiving in a letter to a friend back in England, dated Dec. 11, 1621.

Actually, a form of Thanksgiving goes back a long way before the Pilgrims to a time when the first man conceived the idea of a Supreme Being and there would be someone to thank for a bountiful harvest.

The Biblical patriarch Moses set aside for the Jews two great religious feasts of thanksgiving for the harvest, the Feast of the Spring Harvest (Hag Shavu'oth) and the Feast of the Fall Harvest (Sukkoth).

Pre-Christian Europe gave thanks for the full barns and stocked larders of successful harvest season to a grain god or goddess, be it Astarte, Osiris, Tammuz, Demeter or Ceres.

Christians of the Middle Ages had the Feast of St. Martin of Tours (Martinmas) that was celebrated all over Europe, starting with a Mass, then games, dancing, parades and finally dinner, featuring the traditional roasted St. Martin's goose.

The Pilgrims introduced Thanksgiving to the New World in 1621 but the exact date has been forgotten. The best guess is that it was somewhere between the beginning of October and the first week in November.

The menu contained no mention of turkeys, cranberries or pumpkin pies, all native to the Western Hemisphere and the staples of Thanksgiving as we enter the 21st Century. Dinner would be unthinkable without them.

The Pilgrims and their Indian friends ate venison, roast duck, roast goose, clams, eels, water cress, white and corn bread, leeks, wild plums and dried berries, washing it down with red and white wine, at the first American Thanksgiving.

The traditional turkey came much later, so-called because the English settlers thought the red wattles on a turkey resembled a tasseled fez from the country of Turkey and translated its clucking sound as "turk, turk, turk."

Right now, Thanksgiving has lost its meaning as a harvest festival since mom and pop farms long ago have given way to the corporate agricultural giants, who give thanks to no one.

What remains is the Thanksgiving dinner — roast turkey with stuffing and a dash of cranberry sauce on the side, white and sweet potatoes, succotash (corn and lima beans), mince or pumpkin pie, washed down with a glass of cider.

But enough of that! Let's eat!

More Lobster Lab follies

To the Editor:

One would think that the Board of Selectmen would respond to Kevin Ulmer's magnificent offer by cooperating to make the Learning Lab for Marine Biology the best possible facility, and by removing road blocks instead of erecting them. But such common sense is in short supply.

Selectman Merle Brown insists that he can't approve a proposal unless it has the same footprint and same interior square footage as the original Hagerty building. Nan Roth and Michael Sullivan are equally negative to improving the building space. The important thing, surely, is to get for the town the best that the proponents can achieve with the Hagerty building, limited only by the funds they can raise.

The architects have developed an excellent plan that makes maximum use of the building's footprint, much improved over the original idea. The second floor area is fully utilized by expanding to the same dimension as the first, and the former attic is transformed into useable space. The plan includes a small enclosure at the rear, outside of the footprint, primarily to enclose the handicapped ramp, but also the elevator and the code-required secondary stairs. The exterior appearance also is much improved, and is better liked by its neighbors than is the existing mongrel shape. The town's students will benefit, rather than being harmed, by efficient use of the building and by the minor addition to the footprint. Yet Brown is adamantly opposed, reciting the mantra that only the original footprint and the original internal square footage can be leased. Why? Who decreed that limitation? Where is the logic in leasing the building but drawing the line at improvements that will considerably improve its utility to the students? What does it matter if the original proposal was less ambitious? Surely, what's important is getting the best from the structure for the town's students. Standing for a principle isn't all that admirable if the principle is grounded on irrationality.

To obtain funding from foundations for capital and operating cost, obviously the Lab can't be restricted to Cohasset students, and must be presented as regional, even though the realities of transportation will result in its being primarily of benefit to Cohasset residents. But Brown seems to believe in cutting off one's nose to spite the face, by arguing that town property shouldn't be used for a regional facility. Better a gesture toward regionalization than have the Lab severely limited to what can be done with only local donations. Such provincialism may play well with some elements in the town, but it would be Cohasset's students who would get cheated by such tunnel vision.

At the spring town meeting, the proponents presented a warrant article intended specifically to obtain a 10-year lease, rather than the shorter lease favored by some selectmen. A long-term lease is an important factor in attracting support and serious money. A proposed amendment to reduce the term was soundly defeated and it was then voted to issue an RFP for a 10-year lease, because the voters had the good sense to understand the reasons. But lo and behold, the new RFP specifies a two-year lease, renewable only if the timetable for fundraising and construction is met, while the evaluation criteria penalizes a reasonable schedule and favors one that is unreasonably short. To compound the charade, some selectmen claim that the two-year term is to better protect the interests of the bidder!

Rather than try to micro-manage the project and compromise the quality of the Lab by attempts to redesign it via the skewed evaluation criteria published in the RFP, a more sensible Board of Selectmen would enter into a simple agreement, and leave it to their responsible and mature fellow citizens to do their stuff. That worked well with the original Lightkeepers' project, thanks to the practical common sense of former selectman Rocco Laugelle.

Listening to the petty and uninformed quibbling of some of the current selectmen is like being pecked to death by ducks.

Improve roads, ditch train

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my great concern over the restoration of the Greenbush service on the South Shore. First, I would like to say that when the project was first announced, I was a great supporter and welcomed the news of another way of commuting to work. I wondered why would anyone not want the train restored. The train ran along the tracks before, so why would there be any problem with starting up the service again?

My wife and I were on opposite sides of this issue. I began to walk and drive along this route and compare it with other lines under construction and currently in use. I began to notice that all of the other lines were for the most part wide open straight lines with very few grade crossings. Also, most of the homes were not very close to the tracks. I invite you to look at the houses along the South/Hersey Street intersection. There are tree grade crossings in one small block of the downtown with room for no more than two cars to wait at the crossing before blocking the intersections.

How will this work? Most of the time there are cars waiting over the tracks to get through these intersections. What happens when a train approaches? Does the train stop and wait for the traffic to move or does the gate just drop down on the traffic waiting to move through the intersection? Another problem area would be in Weymouth Landing where it was explained by the T that the commuter train would be blocking Quincy Ave. (Route 53) and Commecial Street when it stopped at the station. Imagine this at rush hour!

We have friends in Wellesley who said the commuter rail runs by their downtown with no problems. We went out to look at it and the train passes by the downtown but does not bisect right through all of the streets with grade crossings as the Greenbush does. (This line is also below grade, similar to the expressway in Milton which reduces all of the crossings through the town.)

A major problem is also the converging of three lines in Braintree onto one track. Besides he noise for the people on the tracks in this area, the problems with three lines convergin is that the other trains are held up (even with timing a schedule) while they wait for the other trains to switch tracks. After riding the Redline for 10 years, the major problem all the time was switching problems where the two Redlines merge in Dorchester.

There is no way the trains can keep their optimistic schedule when all three lines are running on a full schedule.

Another issue which is not discussed too often is the filling of hundreds of acres of wetlands, mainly in the Cohasset area to accomodate the rail line. To me this is unbelievable in this day to hear that this would be done. If the line existed before, how come there was no need to destroy all of this?

Another issue is the cost to restore this line. For millions of taxpayer dollars, only a couple of thousand riders? I also firmly believe that these people are most likely current riders of public transportation of other forms: mainly bus, Redline, or commuter boat riders who would just switch over to the commuter line. This would still not solve any traffic problems as people who commute by car really like the freedom of their cars and this will not change.

Finally, there is truly a real threat to destroying the character of Hingham's historic homes and downtown. It is a wonderful place which looks and feels like a step back in time and it is worth preserving. There are very few places left in this country which preserve the past so well yet are still active and not part of some museum.

I have realized that just because the train ran along this narrow winding strip through the South Shore does not mean it was the right place for it. It was just easier at the time. In reality, it would never be considered today if there was not an old rail bed there.

Why not invest these millions of dollars in upgrading services which exist now or making some simple changes to traffic patterns in the area?

As far as automobile traffic is concerned, the majority of people who would be potential riders on the Greenbush line would be people who commute along Route 3A. The real problems begin on this road after crossing over the Back River where the sea of traffic begins. There is nothing more frustrating than waiting at both sets of lights turning red at the Harborlight Mall when the parking lot is empty. Then, all along the rest of the route are lights turning red out of sequence, backing up traffic through this area. However, the real problem along this stretch is further up the road in Quincy at the intersection of Southern Artery and Washington Street. This is where the money could be used wisely. There needs to be a lane for traffic to turn right onto Southern Artery at all times to keep this road from bogging down. The Quincy police officer does his best to keep this area moving but can only work with what he has. When only the lights are functioning, the traffic quickly backs up all the way through Weymouth.

Another area where the money could be well spent would be to rebuild the Fore River bridge to allow for the large ships to pass under without having to lift the bridge. It is outrageous that the bridge is allowed to be raised during rush hour. This happens several times a week and completely destroys the commute as the whole process takes about 15 minutes. This in itself is a major contributor to the problems on Route 3A.

As for Route 3, the commuters closest to this route do have the option of taking the already restored lines. However, several changes could be made to improve traffic flow along this route. One of the biggest bottlenecks is caused at the Union Street interchange in Braintree. The amount of traffic coming onto the highway at this location calls for another lane. In the winter, Union Street is backed up to Weymouth Landing just to get onto Route 3. This also causes Route 3 to back up to Derby Street in Hingham. The traffic usually frees up after this merge point. What could help would be to allow the use of the breakdown lane for the cars coming on at Union Street up to the split with Route 128. Currently two lanes of traffic come up the Union Street on ramp and try to merge into the two inside lanes of traffic slowing and stopping these two travel lanes.

I also remember back in the 70s there was talk of running a Monorail type system down the Route 3 median. Whatever happened to that idea? Was the thought too far into the future? It would be fantastic to revive the idea. It is very efficient, clean and quiet. It is a great people mover at Disney World and there is no reason why it could not work here. It would also make use of a no-man's land and cause little disruption of neighborhoods.

In closing, all I would like to say is that there are many other possibilities to be looked at besides this last spur of the commuter line. For the disruption and money it would cost it just would not solve the real problems commuting from this area. To me it does not even come close after reviewing it. I would hope that others who look at this issue will come to this conclusion also before it is too late to go back.

State backs special on-site districts

Because the On-Site Wastewater Management District is something of an experimental concept, the health board could have its hands full as it grapples with the best way to establish the ground rules,

(DEP officials, such as John Higgins, have acknowledged the state agency wants communities to try out the septic districts, especially in areas where laying sewer mains has proved tough. That's a part of the reason state revolving fund dollars that used to go for sewers are being diverted for the OWMD instead.)

However, the concept has proved to be a hard sell in many communities which have dubbed the mandatory inspections the "septic police."

Nonetheless, merely belonging to an OWMD can provide unexpected loopholes to a homeowner with a failing septic system who wants to sell the property. In some instances, it can be enough to sidestep Title V repairs prior to the deed transfer.

Specifically, under recent Title V revisions, the septic system inspection is no longer required if the owner belongs to a DEP-approved OWMD.

Other features of the OWMD allow the town to provide technical assistance to the homeowner and potentially reduce the costs of maintaining the systems.

quired to implement a plan," Ulmer said because of the town meeting vote to OK the legal settlement.. Although the specific regulations that will cover the OWMD properties have yet to be decided, the board is "stuck with doing the inspections every seven years," he said.

Ulmer said the board would have to hire inspectors to handle the increased work load or contract out some of the site visits.

"This is more or less what we're stuck with," Ulmer acknowledged, though the health board remains "quite unhappy with that particular course of events." The settlement, he said, came independent of the board's efforts to launch a town-wide plan to deal with Cohasset's sewer woes.

Though sewer commission Chairman Ted Guild said the plan was favorable to Cohasset, he acknowledged the arrangement did place some burdens on both the health board, which is charged with operating it, and the homeowners in the OWMD.

Nonetheless, Guild said it was the best deal Cohasset could get from the state.

Moreover, the sewer commissioner maintained people did not yet understand the advantages of the OWMD.

"I don't think many people have any grasp of what an excellent deal this is for them," Guild said.

Guild said the state could provide up to $3 million in loans (about $20,000 per homeowner) through the state revolving fund to offset the cost of upgrading septic systems, and the objective was not necessarily to repair the individual system but to design joint treatments systems that would potentially serve three or four homeowners.

Finally, according to Mary Griffin, in the state Attorney General's Office, Cohasset has been subject to a Superior Court order to build a new wastewater treatment plant and lay new sewer mains for about 20 years. The latest plan was an effort to compromise after the town opted not to build a new treatment plant but to upgrade the existing one and to reduce the final total number of homes to be ultimately sewered.

"The town signed a consent judgment," Griffin said. "This latest judgment is in the context of the old order by the court to provide more flexibility."

Griffin said Cohasset never built the new plant and maintained extending sewer mains to more than 40 percent of the town would not be cost-effective due to the presence of ledge.

"I'm not saying this is an easy thing for the 136 people, but the state is trying to assist as well," she said.

COUNCIL CORNER/ PAT BAIRD

MIDDLE-HIGH SCHOOL

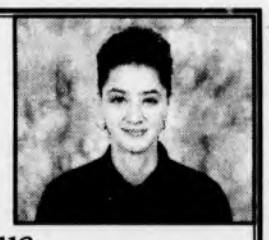
The Middle-High School Council met Nov. 3. It was announced that the PSO and the school are going to cosponsor a number of forums dealing with educational/social issues. The first forum was held Nov. 17 for the Middle School. Social issues pertaining to our middle school young people were discussed. Future topics will include forums on curriculum frameworks, (scheduled for this winter) and testing (scheduled for this spring).

The council discussed the budget with level funding, increased enrollment and building maintenance.

A survey to review and evaluate block scheduling is in the development stage.

The next professional development day will be March 23 and not March 13, as the calendar states. The next council meeting will be held Dec. 1, at 7 p.m., in the high school guidance meeting room. Everyone is welcome.

DEER HILL



The Deer Hill School Council met Oct. 7. The meeting focused on planning the agenda for the school council-sponsored evening discussion "Homework: Balancing the Fulcrum Between Work and Play," which was held Oct. 8. The panel discussion was led by Barbara Green, a child psychologist. The panelists were Sue Horigan, Frank Deacon and Nancy Magnussen, as well as council representatives. Largely, it was determined that parents feel that homework is the most important activity that their children do after school, but that it often is hard to accommodate all the other extracurricular activities.

The need for the replacement of the single pane windows was discussed.

The PSO's second "Sock Hop" was very successful. Deer Hill's faculty, students and their families had a great time.

Several offices were painted during Mr. Callahan's second annual "Make a Difference Day." Also, Cohasset's Boy Scout Troop 38 made a number of large picnic tables, two of which are handicapped-accessible. These tables will be used in the courtyard for lunch or outside classes.

Court considers arguments on rejected landfill expansion

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The decision on whether to uphold the board of health's decision to reject Cohasset Height's Landfill's expansion now rests with a Norfolk Superior Court judge.

Several groups both for and against the landfill expansion argued the case before the court last Friday. Norfolk Superior Court Judge Isaac Borenstein heard from the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), town-attorney Jean Kelley, and CHL-attorney Anton Moehrke.

Judge Borenstein could deliver a decision before the end of the year.

"The judge heard all oral arguments from the interested parties," Moehrke said. "The judge heard a number of briefs and oral arguments, and now it all rests with Judge Borenstein."

Friday's hearing stems from the board of health's decision in 1996 to reject CHL's proposal to expand the horizontal area of the landfill.

The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), ruled in 1996 that the landfill was a suitable site for expansion. But the final decision rests with the health board.

State law says that the health board shall approve the expansion unless it poses a threat to public health.

The health board denied the expansion because it felt the expansion would endanger human health.

State law says the health board's decision should be upheld unless it is arbitrary, capricious or illegal.

SAFE member John K. McNabb Jr. said the health board based its rejection on information supplied by CHL engineers that the landfill would be on top of groundwater at less then four-foot depth.

At Friday's hearing, SAFE attorney Kevin McDonnell argued that the court should uphold the health board's decision as legal.

Moehrke argued that the DEP decision was binding legislation, McNabb said.

"Just because DEP said it was a suitable site, doesn't mean it's allowed by right if there is a threat to human health," McNabb said.

According to McNabb, Moehrke also argued that health board Chairman Alix White, who is a former member of SAFE, influenced the health board to deliver a biased decision against CHL.

But Moehrke did not show how White made an allegedly biased decision, McNabb said. He added that Moehrke tried to say that White's former allegiance to SAFE prevented her from making an unbiased decision.

But McNabb refuted that assertion.

"The case law shows that elected officials are elected to have positions on issues," McNabb said.

McNabb said he believes CHL's case is further weakened because the health board based its decision on information supplied by CHL experts.

McNabb said Moehrke also argued that the DEP finding forces the town to presume that the expansion would be conducted in compliance with all regulations. State regulations require the landfill to be more than four feet above groundwater.

But CHL's own experts stated that the expansion would be less than four feet from the groundwater, posing a threat to human health. It also disproved the presumption that the landfill would be built in compliance with all current regulations.

McNabb said he was confident that the town would prevail. He said Judge Borenstein interrupted Moehrke several times to question statements implying that the town had violated of CHL's rights.

CHL lost a previous court bid asserting that the town had violated its civil rights.

"We expect the judge to make his decision soon," McNabb said. "He has read the briefs, he has asked for excerpts from the transcripts to back up the oral arguments, and he is extremely involved in the material."

The town's battle against CHL has generated 3,000 pages of court documents and cost the town $100,000 in court fees.

DEP cites CHL for permit violation

The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) has cited the Cohasset Heights Landfill (CHL) for failing to file a construction permit for part of the landfill with the registry of deeds.

In 1989, CHL failed to file its DEP permit to construct area IV-A of the landfill. Two weeks ago John K. McNabb Jr., vice-president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE),discovered that CHL had illegally filled an unpermitted area (Area IV-B) that bordered area IV-A.

While researching that recent violation, McNabb also discovered that CHL had not filed the DEP permit.

"The failure by CHL to file the required notice means that this DEP permit to construct Area IV-A of the landfill has never become effective," McNabb said. "And that the landfill has been operating in violation of state law since July 3, 1989."

In a letter to CHL owner Paul Barry dated Nov. 4, DEP directed Barry to file the permit within 21 days or face legal action.

CHL's attorney, Anton Moehrke, said that the failure to file the permit was an oversight on the company's part. He said with the busy nature of the landfill business, filing the permit was an action that slipped through the cracks.

Moehrke added that CHL has filed the permit.

"CHL sent a letter to its engineer and he filed the permit," Moehrke said.

Moehrke also pointed out that not filing the permit did not invalidate all of CHL's subsequent permits since 1989.

But McNabb said the failure to file the permit and a legal plan showing the boundaries of Area IV-A allowed the company to get away with illegal dumping in Area IV-B over the last eight years.

"This failure to file the required notice is not merely a paper violation," McNabb said. "CHL was required to file a recordable plan with its deed that shows the exact area permitted for the landfill. The failure to file this plan back in 1989 made it much easier for CHL to get away with the illegal dumping we just caught them at."

Reduced fees for Bancroft Hall

Fees for Cohasset residents using Bancroft Hall will again be reduced, beginning Jan. 1, 1998, according to Cohasset Lightkeepers President R. Murray Campbell, following a Board of Directors meeting Nov. 13 and a review of operating expense and income. More than half the bookings at Bancroft Hall are at no cost to non-profit groups. Revenues from apartment rentals and from private functions must cover not only the operating expenses, but also provide reasonable reserve for long-term capital items such as roof replacement, exterior painting and equipment replacement.

After Jan. 1, 1998, fees for Cohasset residents will be $100 for Monday through Wednesday, except holidays, and $300 for Thursday through Sunday and holidays. Fees for non-residents will be $300 and $500 respectively. Capacity is 85 seated at tables, or 120 without tables.

There is a comprehensive agreement that must be signed by all users, with a security deposit of $100, and non-profits must conform to the requirements in the same manner as must private functions. Liquor may be served only by approved caterers or bar services whose insurer has named the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation as "additional insured" on their liquor liability policy.

To avoid disappointment, bookings should be made well in advance by calling 383-1433.

Cohasset Brownies bake bread for food pantry

But the 26 loaves of flavored bread that the Brownies in Troop 4738 baked were not for them.

"It's for the food pantry," said Brownie Samantha Burgoon, who added that she was happy to participate.

As a change of pace from arts and crafts, troop leaders Andrea Martone and Amanda Burgoon decided to introduce the second- and third-grade girls to the concept of community service.

"You get a real feeling of community service," said Martone. "I felt we should start to do more things for the community."

The Brownies gathered for their regular meeting last Friday at the Second Congregational Church to combine water, eggs and cake mix in large bowls and stir the ingredients until ready to be placed in foil bread pans. They baked the bread in the church kitchen's three large ovens.

After freezing the loaves for freshness over the weekend, the troop planned to deliver the bread to the pantry Tuesday. Each loaf will be affixed with a label indicating that the bread was handmade by the Brownies.

"I think it's a good thing," said Brownie Taylor Walker. "People who don't get food a lot on Thanksgiving can get it."

Food pantry clients — about 30 Cohasset families — will receive the loaves of bread as part of their Thanksgiving dinner packages.

The Brownies' donation, wrapped decoratively with ribbons, will be an added treat for the pantry's clients — above and beyond the turkeys, fresh vegetables and stuffing they will be receiving for the holiday feast, said volunteer Marjorie Steele.

"I think it's great," Steele said. "It's always great to have freshly baked bread for the clients. And it's a great way for the younger kids to get involved."

The food pantry normally receives its donations from five churches in town as well as from individual residents.

The pantry, located at 43 Highland Avenue at the Second Congregational Church, is open for donations or visits from prospective clients on Tuesdays from 9 to 11 a.m., or call 383-0345.

Jingle Bell Walk is Nov. 28

The South Shore Community Center invites family and friends to join in the holiday spirit at the Jingle Bell Walk. The Jungle Bell Walk, a Cohasset tradition, begins at 1:30 p.m. Nov. 28, when Santa Claus arrives by boat with his elves at Cohasset Harbor (Border St.). After Santa distributes jingle bells to the children, he will ride the fire truck and the walk continues along the sidewalks of Elm to Main St. in Cohasset. At 2 p.m. the community center welcomes all to partake in cookies, a beverage, and a holiday-sing-along. Holiday music and carols will also be sung by all. Santa will be upstairs in the center to pose for pictures with you and your children. Merchants participate by offering complimentary treats or discounts to shoppers. Please stroll through the village to share in the local shops' holiday ambiance. At 2:45 p.m. on Cohasset Common there will be a Turkey Tot Trot for ages three to 10. Pre-registration for this event is $2 per participant is required. Proceeds will go to benefit the nursery school. All participants will receive a prize. Listen to the bells of St. Stephen's playing from 2 to 4 p.m. while enjoying a hayride around the common. Hayrides will be available from 2:30 to 4 p.m. The festivities culminate on Cohasset Common at 4 p.m. with the lighting of the tree. There is something for everyone this year at the Jungle Bell Walk. It's a great way to appreciate our picturesque surroundings while involving the whole family in a Cohasset tradition. The rain date is Nov. 29 with the same itinerary.

Cohasset holiday house tour is planned

Homes for the Holiday is the theme for this year's biennial house tour sponsored by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. Five beautifully decorated homes will be open for viewing Dec. 10 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. There will be a diversity of styles represented, including a riverside French country-style manor with a Great Hall living room and entrance turret and a 1790s post-and-beam house with the original twin chimneys. A 1780s Victorian residence with gingerbread detailing, a contemporary home set between a rocky ledge and water, and an English fieldstone country manor with impressive vistas of Massachusetts Bay and Cape Ann round out the tour. Free refreshments will be available at Bates Hall in the Second Congregational Church, including coffee and muffins from 10 a.m. to noon, and tea and holiday cookies from noon to 4 p.m. The Octet from the Broad Cove Chorale, under the direction of Margo Euler, will perform a capella carols and close harmony songs of the season in mid-afternoon at several of the homes.

Tickets for the tour are available at the South Shore Community Center at 3 North Main St. in Cohasset. The phone number is (781) 383-0088. If purchased in advance, the tickets are $15 and on the day of the tour they are $20. This year the community center is sponsoring a lunch which can be purchased for $5 from 11:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Proceeds from the house tour will be used to support the numerous civic projects of the Garden Club, which include historic restoration and preservation, civic beautification, scholarship grants and community education programs. The club also contributes time and money to various environmental and conservation agencies.

Lee Androski, Lelia Weinstein and Susan Callahan invite you to the Cohasset holiday house tour Dec. 10. The tour is sponsored by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset.

Favorite vegetable dishes

This is the big week that all look forward to – Thanksgiving! Everyone puts in their requests for their favorite vegetable at our house, that is a little tradition that has gone on for years. The one common thing that everyone asks for is the creamy potato casserole. These resemble the "old fashioned delmonico potatoes", but are much easier (no peeling, dicing required), and every bit as good. The recipe came from Shirley Watters, an old friend that lived here for many years before moving to Florida. Hope you enjoy it, once again thanks go to Shirley for sharing it.

Creamy Hash Brown Bake

1 package (32 ounces) frozen hash brown potatoes (the type that are small dices potatoes)

2 cups shredded cheddar cheese

1 can condensed cream of chick soup, undiluted

2 cups (16 ounces) sour cream

3/4 cup butter or margarine, melted, divided

1/2 cup chopped onion

1/4 teaspoon paprika

2 cups crushed corn flakes

fresh savory, optional

In a large bowl, combine hash browns, cheese, soup, sour cream, 1/2 cup butter and onion. Spread into a greased 13" x 9" x 2" baking dish. Sprinkle with paprika. Combine cornflakes and remaining butter; sprinkle on top. Bake, uncovered, at 350 degrees for 50-60 minutes or until heated through and bubbly. Garnish with savory if desired. Yield: 8-10 services.

The other must-have is always Millie Mitman's squash pudding, which can be found in the Cohasset Entertains Cookbook" – outstanding!

Finally, Baked Stuffed Onions

6 large onions, unpeeled

1 cup Ricotta cheese

1 egg, slightly beaten

1 tablespoon parsley flakes

1 teaspoon salt, dash black pepper

1 tablespoon melted butter

Slice off tops and bottoms of onions; do not peel. Cook in boiling water, 10 minutes. Remove onions; cool; peel. Combine cheese, egg, parsley, salt and pepper. Carefully remove centers from onions. Chop remaining center; add 1/2 cup chopped onion to Ricotta mixture. Fill onions with Ricotta mixture. Place onions in an 8" square baking dish. Brush with melted butter. Bake in 350 degree oven, 15-20 minutes.

Happy Thanksgiving to all!

COHASSET MARINER

Football the way it was meant to be

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

If you like rain, cold and mud, then Alumni Field at Cohasset High School was the place for you last Saturday night.

On a night that even grave robbers would have stayed at home, a charity football game between members of the Cohasset Police Association and New England Patriots alumni was played.

Somewhat obscured behind the rain and fog were approximately 200 fans who braved the elements to watch the Patriots Alumni top the Cohasset team, 26-20.

Last year, the first time the game was held, more than 1,000 fans showed up to watch the game.

Why was the game played? The answer was supplied by Fred Laugelle, president of the Cohasset Police Association. "We knew only too well the conditions were not too good for a game; however, it takes a lot of doing to get these guys together and we just had to go through with it."

Laugelle continued, "You had to be a little crazy to be playing out there, but it was worth it. We had a ton of laughs slogging through that mud.

"We had to play, but the fans were something else, coming out to watch the game and sticking around in the cold and rain right to the very end."

The Pats were very gracious to the fans, despite the rain and cold, taking time to sign autographs and say hello to the kids that showed up.

"I don't know about the fans, but the players certainly enjoyed the game. I for one haven't laughed as much in quite some time as I did during the game," said Laugelle.

As far as the Police Association was concerned, it was a better game for them than last year. This time around they shaved eight points off the final score, having lost 42-34 last year.

Once the game got under way, it was almost impossible to determine who was who. The easiest way to score the game was to try to remember when the uniforms were clean what end of the field the respective teams were on.

Using that formula, the game went as follows: The Alumni scored first, making the score 6-0. The Association then slogged down the field from the opposite side to tie the score.

The Alumni then made two scoring marches from their side of the field to take a 20-6 lead.

Then the other side moved again, and following a TD and a conversion rush, the Association was trailing 20-14.

Both sides later made scoring moves from their side of the field for the final score.

One of the real sights of the game was seeing former Patriots' kicker John Smith running all over the field in the rain and mud. Smith is 49 years old.

While the game was a lot of fun for the players and the fans, it also meant good things for a lot of kids. Some of the money taken in at the game will go toward scholarships for two Cohasset High seniors, while the Cohasset Little League will also be the recipient of some of the funds.

Some of the players for the Association included Laugelle, Kevin Dooley, Chris and Ralph Froyo, Paul Bilodeau, Frank Mahoney, Chris Sorentino, Richie Joachim and Tom DeSilva.

Former Patriot players that showed up included Fred Smerlas, Steve DeOssie, Moshie Tatupu, Steve King, Roland James, Pete Brock and others.

Following the game, players on both sides went out for a much-needed dinner.

Fearless Turkey Day football predictions

The following football insights were put together by Mariner sports guys Dave McKee and Dave Wolcott while waiting for Drew Bledsoe, Scott Zolak and Max Lane to clear off the stage at the Paradise.

Duxbury vs Marshfield

McKee: I have a funny feeling about this game. Duxbury is at home and can go to its first-ever Super Bowl with a win but I think the Rams have the Green Dragons number. Three times this decade, this T-Day match-up had Super Bowl implications. In '91 Marshfield blanked Duxbury 7-0 to prevent a post-season trip for the Dragons. In the last two years, the Rams needed T-Day wins to go to the Super Bowl and got 'em both. That's three for three for the Rams. Make it four for four in '97.

Wolcott: Dave Seger and Super Bowl have the same amount of letters. Coincidence, destiny or a desperate attempt by me to be witty and glib. You be the judge, but Duxbury's star running back needs to have another big game on both sides of the football for his team to get to play once more this season. The Green Dragons have worked too hard to come this far and not get the opportunity to play at B.U. in the Division 3 Super Bowl on Dec. 6. It's Marshfield and it's the annual Thanksgiving Day battle, but Duxbury will send the home crowd into a tizzy and Whitman-Hanson fans home unhappy with Local booters help Milton to perfect season

Cohasset soccer players Cara McKenney and Lydia Crafts recently finished a championship season with the girls' varsity soccer team at Milton Academy.

The Milton team, which has been deemed the best team in the state, swept the Independent School League. The group was the first women's soccer team from Milton to ever win the I.S.L. and the second ever I.S.L. team to go undefeated.

They entered the New England Tournament as the Class A (big schools) number one seed and defeated Hotchkiss in the quarter finals, 1-0, and then moved on to defeat Andover, 4-1.

In the finals, the team was faced with its nemesis, Buckingham Browne & Nichols. The battle was held in the snow at Tabor Academy in Marion, Mass.

Milton, after scoring two goals in double overtime, came away with the 4-2 win and the title of New England Champions.

Cohasset residents Cara McKenney and Lydia Crafts were two of the leading players behind Milton Academy's drive this season to the New England high school soccer championships.

Coach Mike Kinneally commented on the game, "Our girls were faced with a challenge, and I was proud of the way they responded, with composure."

This finished off Milton's flawless 19 win and zero loss season, a fantastic accomplishment for a soccer team.

McKenney is a senior and has played center midfield for the team; and Crafts, a wing midfielder, is a sophomore.

one of the more important victories in the history of their football program. Let's go bowling.

Hanover vs Norwell

McKee: Norwell is in the Super Bowl and Hanover, along with every other team in the SSL, is just playing out the string on T-Day. Even though the game is at Hanover and the Clippers will have visions of Super Bowls dancing in their heads, Brian Fabrizio and Brian Doherty will lead Norwell to an easy win.

Wolcott: Norwell has already assured itself of a Super Bowl by winning the South Shore League. Coming into this game, that fact may not really be a positive thing. Hanover has nothing to lose and have nothing on the line except their pride and the chance to knock of hated rival Norwell on Thanksgiving Day. Norwell is going to get caught looking forward to its Super Bowl date and fall to defeat at the hands of the Indians.

Bridgewater-Raynham vs Silver Lake

McKee: Silver Lake hasn't beaten B-R in 17 years. Silver Lake is coming off a disappointing non-league loss to Rockland. And Silver Lake has to play this inaugural Turkey Day tilt on the road. Therefore I give Silver Lake the edge. The reason is simple. Bond, Jon Bond. This senior rifleman is going to have a big game at QB and lead the Lakers to the Division I Super Bowl. One more thing, expect the scoreboard operator to get a serious workout.

Wolcott: First game in new Thanksgiving Day rivalry. Two squads. Six towns involved. Three local towns going to the Super Bowl. Lakers win.

Whitman-Hanson vs Abington

McKee: This is the oldest T-Day rivalry on the South Shore and I have no doubt that the W-H Panthers will send the Green Wave home hungry on T-Day. The Panthers will also use this game as a tune-up for the Super Bowl after Duxbury falls to Marshfield.

Wolcott: A tougher call than one might be led to believe when looking at the record of each squad. The Panthers go to the Super Bowl if Marshfield upends Duxbury and they win this game. On the other hand, the Green Wave is riding a losing streak into this game and has not had one of their better years. None of that matters. Every Thanksgiving morning without fail, Abington gives the Panthers a run for their money, no matter how the game may look on paper beforehand. I'm torn. I grew up in Abington but later moved to Whitman and graduated from W-H. My first reporting job was for the Whitman-Hanson Mariner, but my first editing spot was with the Abington-Rockland Mariner. The deciding factor for me goes back more than 10 years. Panther head coach Bob Bancroft was my homeroom teacher in high school. If memory serves me right, I might still owe him a detention. Hopefully picking his team to win will clear up that little matter. Whitman-Hanson continues their Turkey Day winning streak in another close battle.

Randolph vs Rockland

McKee: Rockland is on a winning roll after dropping the 3-0 Mud Bowl to Norwell. The Dogs are probably better than half the teams going to the Super Bowl so this one should be an easy win for them. Randolph already had their big upset last year on T-Day.

Wolcott: Rockland is the best team around that isn't going to a Super Bowl game. Just ask Silver Lake. Save for their 3-0 Mud Bowl loss to South Shore League champs Norwell, Rockland would be playing this game for a Super Bowl spot for the second year in a row. It was only a year ago that these same two teams met at Memorial Field in Rockland for the Super Bowl chance and Randolph simply destroyed the home team. Elephants are not the only animal with a long memory. Look for these Bulldogs to extract their pound of flesh and avenge last year's drubbing.

Scituate vs Hingham

McKee: Two running teams, two teams that had a lot of tough injuries and two teams that wish their records were a little better. I think this will be the best T-Day game of the day. And whoever has the ball last will win. I think the Sailors will be that team.

Wolcott: Yeah, what he said.

Hull vs Cohasset

McKee: Hull in a romp. Pirates plunder Skippers. Cohasset swept out to sea. Something like that will be Friday's headline.

Wolcott: Give a great deal of credit to anyone who attends this game. With the late-November winds coming off the Atlantic Ocean, Hull Gut may indeed be the coldest place on the face of this earth. Hull's running game and overwhelming size advantage would seem to be enough to send the Cohasset fans home cold and unhappy, but the Skippers lead the most important category 1-0: the number of Mariner sports correspondents on the team. Go Cohasset. And Jim O'Sullivan, go out there and hit somebody for all the sportswriters out there who are too old and out of shape to get the job done.

Basketball program needs your help

The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.

Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years. Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away.

Basketball registration for boys and girls grades 1-8, is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 15, 9 a.m.-11 a.m., Town Hall.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

Junior lacrosse program needs additional coaches

Thanks to phenomenal growth in popularity and interest, the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse Club is in need of additional coaches for the Spring 1998 season. No lacrosse experience is necessary.

The reason the team can take coaches without experience is the structure of its league, the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Association, the largest youth league in the country. The league allows communities to have more than one entry, and then allows multiple teams to be scheduled so that they always play in the same place — either home or away together — on the same day.

"We have grown to the point where there is a good chance we will want to field two teams this year," said Chuck Jaffe, who runs the junior program in Cohasset. "If we get volunteers with no experience, I can act as head coach for both teams. If we get someone with lacrosse experience, we each can coach one team. We need a helping hand more than we need an experienced hand." Jaffe explains that the biggest need is for a coach to assist during practices, when the only way to install an offense or defense is in small groups of players. "The rest of the kids should be doing drills or installing the same offense at the other end of the field, but that's not possible without a second or possibly a third coach," he says.

Last year, the Cohasset junior lacrosse team had 30 players, a high number within the Mass Bay youth teams. This year, thanks to a successful summer camp and increased awareness and interest, Jaffe expects closer to 40 children in grades 5 and 6 to sign up. Without at least one additional coach, Jaffe says he might have no choice but to limit the program to a single team of 30 players signed up on a first-come, first-served basis.

With sign-up set for December and the league needing notification of Cohasset's intention to field a second team by January, the program needs to hear from volunteers now. The Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League also holds a winter coaches clinic that volunteers may want to attend. For this spring, Jaffe plans to practice the junior lacrosse program at or after 4:30 p.m. on Mondays and Fridays. Games are Sunday afternoons. Practice begins as weather permits in march, and the season ends Father's Day weekend in June. For more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program and becoming a volunteer coach, contact Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0332.

Traditional ceremony highlights opening of new martial arts studio

Sifu John Loupus exhibits a Tai Chi form at the opening of Scott Jeffery's Jade Forest martial arts studio in Rockland. Loupos has trained Jeffery at his Cohasset studio for the last eight years.

STAFF WRITER

A large gathering in Rockland Saturday afternoon watched the final metamorphosis of a "young sapling into a full-grown tree."

Those were the words of John Loupos as he watched his prized martial arts student Scott Jeffrey officially open his own studio, the Jade Forest Kung Fu/Tai Chi and Internal Arts of Rockland, over the weekend.

The new studio is located in Rockland Center at 344 Union Street.

Jeffrey, who is certified as a Sifu, or teacher of the martial arts, is a 28-year-old Braintree native who has studied under Loupos since 1990 in Cohasset at the original Jade Forest studio, including for the last four as his "right-hand man" and lead instructor, said Loupos.

"I hope his future students realize that they have a teacher of the highest caliber," said Loupos. "I hope that he will attract students that are worthy of him."

Joining Loupos and Jeffrey at the dedication ceremony were representatives of the Cohasset Jade Forest studio in performing the ceremonial Chinese lion dance as well as other forms of the Kung Fu and Tai Chi disciplines.

After getting the blessing of Loupos, Jeffrey said now was the right time to branch out on his own and Rockland was the ideal place to start out his business.

"I like the community and I think it can support this business," said Jeffrey who is beginning 25 students at the studio, a number which he hopes will grow even larger from the good turnout at his grand opening.

"The time was right for me to go out at help spread the discipline into the community," he added. "John (Loupos) has taken me under his wing in the last few years and he's given me his full blessing to go out on my own."

Jeffrey took up the martial arts almost 14-years-ago, but he can't seem to remember why.

"I just remember always bugging my parents to let me get involved in it," said Jeffrey. "It's been so long now that I don't remember what first got me into this, but I'm glad that I did it."

With the popularity of such groups as the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles and the Power Rangers, Jeffrey said the popularity of martial arts has continued to grow over the years.

"From the Bruce Lee movies in the 1960s, the popularity of the martial arts has continued to skyrocket," he said. "It's more popular than ever and it doesn't show any signs of slowing down."

Of his offerings at the school, Jeffrey said in general that the younger students are attracted to the Kung Fu classes, while members of the older generation generally flow towards the Tai Chi sessions.

"Of the two, Kung Fu is more of a cardiovascular or aerobic workout while Tai Chi is slower, more meditative and cerebral in nature," he explained.

Besides the conditioning assets, Jeffrey said that Kung Fu also in a major help for younger people in building self-esteem, self-confidence as well as in developing non-violent conflict resolution techniques.

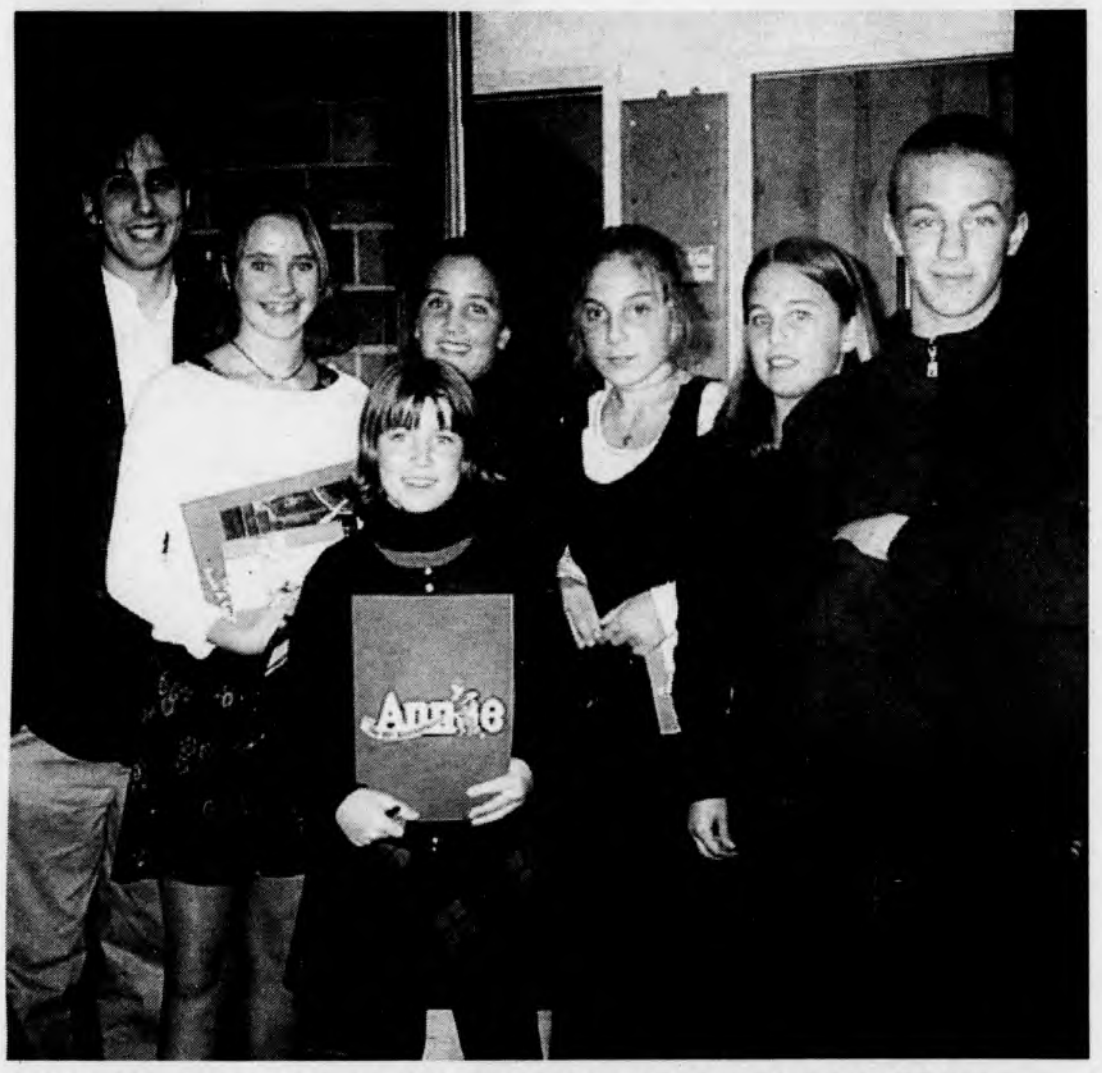
Deer Hill drama club members meet 'Annie'

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The musical, "ANNIE" came to Boston recently and several members of the Deer Hill School's Cohasset Plays By the Sea Drama Club (CPBS) traveled to the Wang Center to catch the show. They ended up backstage afterward and there met Annie, who graciously posed for photos with the Cohasset theater buffs.

Performers love to watch others' performances, and this was no exception. But another motivation to seeing this production of "Annie" was because CPBS has been hard at work since September rehearsing its own "ANNIE" production, and it's always wise to compare scene work, songs and choreography. If hard work pays off, the CPBS will enjoy an exciting sold-out series of performances Jan. 16, 17 and 18 in the Cohasset High School auditorium.

Selling out performances is no strange thing to Cohasset Plays By the Sea. Conceived by Sharon Weber and brought to fruition by a steering committee comprised of Weber, Ron Nicynski, Mary Earon, Nicole Turgiss, Meaghan Marr, Ali Earon and Krista Nicynski, the club is now in its second year, having survived an outrageously successful first season with its sold-out production of "The Wizard of Oz" and a professionally-produced, locally-filmed production of "Anne of Green Gables."



This year drama club membership expanded from youngsters in grades four through six to grades four through nine. According to the Cohasset Plays By the Sea mission statement, the club strives "to provide with consistency a vehicle in which children can explore the many facets of theater and to do so within the support and entrenchment of Deer Hill School, one that recognizes the theater experience to be an expansion of a child's personal levels of achievement through skill, knowledge and attitude of self-confidence, all transferable to life's work."

Directing "ANNIE" is 17-year-old Ron Nicynski of Riverview Drive, with Joan Jensen as music director, and the talented Janet Campbell of Dance Steps in Hingham as dance choreographer.

Tickets for the CPBS production of "ANNIE" will become available in January. Donations for the drama club will be accepted at that time.

'Annie' gives her autograph to Cohasset Plays by the Sea's "Annie," Katie Roche.

Lauren Albanese to perform in the 'Nutcracker'

Lauren Albanese of Cohasset will perform with the Boston Ballet in the 'Nutcracker.'

More than 400 young dancers from the greater Metropolitan Boston area and the adjoining states will perform as toy soldiers, angels, cherubs, dolls, baby mice, reindeer, lambs, polichinelles, and party children in Boston Ballet's production of The Nutcracker at the Wang Theatre, Nov. 28, through Jan. 4.

Traditionally, children have been a vital part of celebrating the holiday season in New England with the magic of The Nutcracker. Featuring the familiar Tchaikovsky score, fairy-tale scenery by Helen Senn and Herbert Pond and stunning costumes by British designer David Walker, The Nutcracker is yuletide entertainment for the whole family. With an annual attendance of more than 140,000 people, Boston Ballet's production is the most popular in the world.

Performing in a full-length ballet exposes students to aspects of ballet life they don't experience in a regular ballet class. All children performing in the Nutcracker are students of Boston Ballet School. The students learn about the hard work, rigors, and enjoyment that goes into every facet of a live ballet performance.

A resident of Cohasset, Lauren Albanese is performing in The Nutcracker as a chocolate doll. Lauren has been a student at Boston ballet School in Norwell for four years.

Lauren has been dancing since the age of two. She will be turning eight years old this New Year's Eve. She is currently enrolled in the Intensive Program at Boston Ballet School.

Tickets for The Nutcracker are available by calling TicketMaster at 931-ARTS, or in person at The Wang Theatre Box Office, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass., Monday through Saturday, 10a.m.-6p.m. Ticket prices range from $12 to $59.

The room provides a wonderful opportunity for young children to shop (without their parents), yet still be helpfully assisted by an older teenager. There will be gifts for every member of the family with all items priced at either 50 cents or $1.

Children may come with their written shopping list or make their list upon arrival. They will be met at the Children's Secret Room door by an ASP teenager (their own personal shopper!) who will happily help guide them through the entire process of gift selection, purchase and gift wrapping.

Visit with Santa

The Appalachia Service Project will also be hosting a Visit with Santa on Cohasset Common during the Village Fair, Saturday, Dec. 6 from 11a.m.-2p.m.

All children are invited to come visit with Santa. There will also be an opportunity to have the child's picture taken with Santa and to make an ornamental pin on button out of the Santa photo.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Speech therapist to talk

The Parents Advisory Council is sponsoring an evening with Denise Yess and Maureen Berr, both speech therapists in the Cohasset Schools. The topic of discussion will be language and how that directly impacts education pre-school and up, strategies that are used, and what is new in the field of speech and language. This evening will be held Tuesday, Dec. 2, 7:30 p.m., at the Deer Hill School library.

All parents are encouraged to attend. For more information call P.A.C. chairperson Kim Maynard at 383-2707.

DRUG FACT

Quotes from the House Judiciary Subcommittee Hearing on Crime . . . Capitol Hill. (10/16/97)

"...then, it is very important for the United States to uphold and enforce its laws?"
(Mr. Hutchinson. Republican Congressman from Arkansas)

"The greatest deterrents to bringing drugs to the United States from Columbia are extradition and the American laws."
(Mr. "Rodriguez" speaking as a former member of the Medellin Drug Cartel.)

PSO says thanks

The Cohasset PSO would like to thank Atlantic Bagel and Dunkin Donuts for their continued donations and support which have so greatly contributed to so many worthy activities for Cohasset's children.

Good News from PSO

Thanks to everyone's contributions and efforts, the Cohasset PSO's Fall Fundraising Campaigns have been extremely successful. The funds raised allow the PSO to continue to contribute to Teacher Grants, enrichment Programs etc. Which might otherwise go unfunded. Stay tuned for further details.

First Christmas village fair was a smashing success

By R.M. Campbell
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The annual Christmas Fair doesn't go all the way back to antiquity, only back to 1940, when the Episcopal, Unitarian and Second Congregational Churches jointly got together. That first fair presaged the future by being a smashing success, maybe because of the novelty, maybe because people wanted the unique quality of hand-made rather than mass-produced things.

Some years later, in 1979, St. Anthony's began to participate, and did so for many years. Until about six years ago, the efforts and the proceeds were pooled, and each church took its turn being the lead organizer. Now each church operates independently, with only a coordinating meeting to avoid duplication of activities and to agree on a date. St. Anthony's no longer participates, but the Greek Orthodox church now does. Regardless, the interaction and sense of community has survived all these years.

Santa Claus, in a sleigh loaned by Richardson White, will always be remembered by children, who then brought their children, and eventually their grandchildren. Some of the Santa impersonators, it can now be revealed, were Ray Condon, Ted Macklin, Al Weisenfluh and Craig Muir. There must have been hundreds of Polaroid pictures taken by beaming parents of Santa and their children. Jeff Steele was the organizer for many years. The picture shown of a youngster in White's sleigh was taken in 1979, and the Santa for that year is not known, but the children then were just as expectant as today's crop.

Recycling isn't anything new; but it's been called a Jumble Sale, a White Elephant table, Attic Treasures, Bargain Bazaar, and other inspired names over the years. Always popular, maybe because one could always go to the fair and buy back some item that one regretted giving away the year before, or one similar to it; the stuff usually collected in the basement of St. Anthony's rectory. No one ever destroys a National Geographic magazine or a volume of Readers' Digest condensed books, so these always were in good supply at the fair's book tables, along with a smorgasbord of fiction, art books, texts, poetry, biography, history, travel, encyclopedias and children's' books. This now goes on at St. Stephen's.

The chowder bar, for many years the special project of Ruth and Carlton Pratt of the Congregational Church, exemplified the ecumenical cooperation. The chowder bar always was in the Unitarian Parish House, and the donated materials and the helpers came from all the churches. Some of the crew were Jean Figueiredo, Al Livingstone, Ken Burnside, Charlie Waters, Julia Ellsworth, Steve Bobo and Charlie Fink. This year, the chowder bar is in the Congregational Church, along with cheese sales and crafts. The wheels of Vermont or New York State cheese have been a traditional magnet, presided over by Ham Tewksbury. This year Joe Sandblom went to Vermont to bring back the big wheels of special Vermont Cheddar, which will be on sale in Bates Hall at the Congregational Church.

The food tables, laden with baked goods, candy and preserves, also were an ecumenical exercise in evasion of calorie counting. A well-remembered highlight is the dinner following the fair, with centerpieces designed by parishioners of St. Stephen's, Unitarian and Congregational Churches, with Barbara Churchill frequently the winner.

Another fond memory is making Christmas corsages in the home of Mercie Nichols and others. When Steve Bobo moved into his new house in 1968, there in the attic, waiting for another Christmas, was a tray of corsages made by guests of Corrinne Paul sitting in the kitchen with a casserole going in the oven to take the chill from the big room.

For many years, the fair was a major source of Christmas trees, and aprons, with Marge Ingram heading up the apron table.

Over a 57-year period, many thousands of aprons, cushions, wreaths, stuffed animals and other handicrafts have been assembled by sociable work groups and snapped up at the fair by discerning buyers.

In 1978, a youngster sits in Richardson White's old sleigh and discusses presents with a jovial Santa who may have been Harry Ritter.

Town worries train work will worsen flooding

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Last October, a record-breaking nor'easter pelted Cohasset with more than 8 inches of rain over three days and resulted in a state of emergency that stopped mail delivery and frightened residents who watched the flood waters continue to rise, even after the opening of the tidal gates in the mouth of the James Brook in the Cove.

A year after the flood, there's little doubt in the mind of Veneta Roebuck of Cohasset's Conservation Committee that filling in any part of the James Brook flood plain will likely aggravate the problem when another big storm wallops the coast.

Yet, as Roebuck well knows, the MBTA still wants to build a railroad track there for the coming Greenbush line, and the T has maintained that 25,000 square feet of fill in the flood plain under the new track will pose no safety or environmental problems for Cohasset.

"It's very complicated," Roebuck said in an interview this week. "We don't want to prejudge."

Four Newtonville homes to get sewer hookups

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The nightmare in Newtonville has turned into a pleasant dream for at least four families in the Atlantic Avenue neighborhood.

The sewer commission announced Monday it will use some of the remaining the "accelerated sewer capacity" authorized by the state to hook those homes up to town sewer.

The town is under a court order to solve its sewer woes which date back 20 years. Under an agreement with the state the

Search begins for new superintendent

By Jason Bouffard

The school committee is doing its homework to begin looking for a replacement for Superintendent Stephen Hart, who announced earlier this year he would be stepping down.

Committee secretary Ralph Kidder, who heads a subcommittee charged with examining the many candidate search issues at hand, informed the school committee last month that they must determine a "spec" — a job description and qualifications for the new superintendent.

"The committee must think about three, four or five things that they new superintendent should accomplish in the first one to three years on the job," Kidder said. "That list should be the most im-

Osgood reuse update sought

Selectmen will ask the Osgood School Reuse Committee for an update.

The 75-year-old school will close in June and the committee is coming up with options for its reuse. The new Osgood school is being constructed behind the Deer Hill School.

"I'd like to see what's cooking," Selectman Diane Sullivan said.

"We can't let that thing sit when it's empty in June," Selectman Merle Brown added.

Fire department monthly report

In his October status report to selectmen, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said the fire department responded to a total of 200 incidents that month. They included two structure fires, three outdoor fires, five car accidents, 44 medical calls, 31 investigations and 71 inspections.

Duty jackets provided for in the fiscal year 1998 budget were also purchased and distributed to each full-time fire-fighter. The jackets are waterproof, breathable and have a blood-borne pathogen barrier. The jackets are worn to medical aid and other non-fire incidents in place of bulky turn-out gear. The duty jackets also help prevent cross-contamination between patients and fire-fighters.

On Oct. 1, several fire-fighters attended a "live-burn" training exercise at the Barnstable Fire Academy. This training evolution completed the six-week training program for fire-fighter recruits Philip Pratt and John Hernan. Captains Mark Trask and James Runey led the new men in this all important exercise and worked with fire-fighters from Hull and Scituate. The men worked together in interior fire-fighting as well as search and rescue training.

About 250 residents attended the open house at the fire department on Oct. 11. The event was part of Fire Prevention Week and was held in conjunction with Papa Gino's and the Cohasset Permanent Firefighters, Local 2804. This year's Fire Prevention Week theme, "Know When To Go!" emphasized escaping as quickly as possible from a fire.

Changes at Beechwood/Route 3A intersection

At the request of the Cohasset Police Departmant, the Massachusetts Highway Department is implementing (or has implemented) several changes at the Beechwood/Route 3A intersection.

In a letter to Police Chief Brian Noonan, Chief Engineer Thomas F. Broderick said "traffic signal ahead" signs will be placed on all approaches; additional lane drop signs will be placed on Route 3A at least 400 feet prior to the lane drop; pavement markings showing the left-turn lane on Route 3A as an optional left-turn lane will be added; and the "green phase" traffic signal for Beechwood will be a minimum of eight seconds and a maximum of 22 seconds based on demand.

All construction signing has been removed.

Noonan asked the state highway department to make the improvements after the intersection was redesigned late last summer. Opening 3A up to two travel lanes at the intersection has turned the area into a speedway, police said. Police were also concerned that the green light phase on Beechwood was too short.

There was a fatal accident at the intersection in September when an elderly woman apparently drove through the red light at Beechwood striking a car traveling south on Route 3A . Police say the accident was not related to the short green light phase.

Dressing up for the holiday house tour

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF REPORTER

In another sign the holiday season has arrived, the Community Garden Club of Cohasset's house tour is slated for Wednesday, Dec. 10 from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

With five homes being readied for the yuletide event, the Mariner was invited to preview one, a country manor with links to both the elegance of Versailles and the hardy tradition of Yankee boat building. Though the address and the owner's name must stay a mystery until the tour, the hostess took time this week to talk about living with a big family on the river in one of Cohasset's most uncommon houses.

It looks like a castle from a fairy tale, with a round tower where Rapunzel could happily welcome a timely prince. But this tower is built of wood, not stone, and shortly after the current owner moved into the manor by the Gulf, it was a seal, not a prince, that arrived.

Still, when the seal clambered up the pier, rocking on one fin, and made itself at home, she decided it was OK.

"Everyone has swans," she said, if they lived in a house by a river. But she thought very few homes ever had a seal drop by.

Yet, the story about the seal's unusual visit proved to be but the first of the many exceptional things apparent about this house.

Remarkably, this is a house that was begun at the height of the Great Depression when few were able to afford even a sandcastle by the water and when "cottages" in High Society resorts like Newport were fast crumbling into replicas of Miss Havisham's House.

Nonetheless, in 1934, this house's main section, a wood frame structure with a Great Room, was completed. Three years later, almost as a fancy, the round tower and breezeway were added, perhaps to continue the original owner's whimsy of building a Cohasset house to resemble one of the country estates in France.

Ultimately, it became a house where a large family committed to casual living can co-exist with architectural splendor.

There is more than a dash of splendor, too as over 60 years, details were added almost unerringly. The detail starts with the pattern of brickwork by the stone wall at the driveway entrance and the gleaming red copper cistern and fountain inside the turret. In fact, almost every corner to be turned in this house and the outdoors brings a fresh and somewhat magical perspective on a familiar Cohasset scene.

Admittedly, a witty French influence predominates, even in the landscaping around the exterior where a ring of tall cedars borders the riverbank. From there, the eye is eventually led up an ivy ladder to the pale green cast-iron balconies under the upstairs rooms— decidedly not in a gradual but predictable slope up to the foundation.

Moreover, many of the fixtures are authentically French, such as a curved marble fireplace, armoire doors, lanterns, and 200-year old walnut panels which came from a house near Versailles.

Also, the original owners hired a mason in France to build the mammoth fireplace in the Great Room. It is more than six-feet wide and every bit as tall. Best of all, it throws heat into every nook and corner of the living room, the current owner said.

The current owners also have a knack for almost perfect innovations, as seen most clearly in the renovated kitchen. The original dark, gallery-style quarters were gutted to make way for an airy open space, broken up by counters of polished granite built at different heights and connected visually to the dining room and the Great Room. Finally, the sun porch was dismantled to be replaced by an alcove of tall windows taking advantage of the Gulf view. It proved to be a magnificent view as it looked on a winter afternoon this week when wind brushed snow as lightly as apple blossoms, over the windows, down towards a green and silver Gulf River.

This is one in an occasional series about unique Cohasset homes.

Mystery House

Description: A manor in the French country style overlooking the Gulf River.

Location: On the Community Garden Club of Cohasset's House Tour, the property was once the site of the former Crocker Boat Works near Cohasset Harbor.

Open to the Public: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 10 only. (Tickets for the tour are sold at the South Shore Community Center at 3 North Main St.)

History: The main house was built in 1934 by the Copeland family on grounds where a boat house had been situated. Though the boat house was moved to the harbor (and is known today as the Hagerty House, the house that has been embroiled in the controversy over a coming Lobster Lab) a relic of the property's nautical past, a weather vane, depicts the transatlantic racer the "Puritan" which used the Crocker Boat Works for dry dock.

Features: A majestic fireplace dominates the Great Hall. (It was built by a mason who had been brought to America from France specifically for the job and continues the French influence found in the entrance turret which features a fountain and hand-painted shutters on the ground floor level.) Though the French country style was captured in numerous details, such as lanterns, cast iron balconies, and walnut panels removed from a house near Versailles, the present owners have improved the sunny atmosphere of the interior by removing an interior wall that isolated the kitchen. They also replaced an exterior wall fronting the river with a windowed alcove visually connected to the kitchen by the hardwood floor as well as a row of ceiling beams painted in Navaho white and a terra cotta faux broken finish.

DPW will resubmit sign request tonight

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Officials from the department of public works (DPW) want to make sure residents can find the front door at the new garage on Cedar Street. To that end, the DPW has been trying to get permission from the zoning board to install a 30-square-foot sign over the main entrance.

However, the garage is located in a residential zone and bylaws restrict signs in that area to no more than six-square-feet.

The zoning board of appeals (ZBA) rejected the DPW's request because the sign would violate the town's bylaws. The DPW plans to re-submit the request tonight at the zoning board's regularly scheduled meeting.

Applicants must usually wait two years to re-submit a plan that the zoning board has rejected. But applicants can re-submit requests with approval from the planning board.

"We're going to re-submit the request because we don't think it got a fair shake."
-BUILDING INSPECTOR ROBERT EGAN.

The planning board gave that go-ahead.

The front of the garage contains several doors and truck bays. DPW officials want a large, noticeable sign so residents know which door is for public use.

Building Inspector Bob Egan represented the DPW at the zoning board hearing on Sept. 17. Egan said a 30-square-foot sign was needed to make sure members of the public entered the correct area of the garage, rather than truck bays or workshops.

"We're going to re-submit the request because we don't think it got a fair shake," Egan said.

Egan said the bylaw is meant to prevent the proliferation of unsightly real estate signs, construction signs and other temporary signs. But the DPW sign, he said, would be a well-crafted 12-by-three-foot sign placed over the front door of the garage.

"Based on what I heard at the meeting, I think the zoning board was reluctant to give something to the town that they wouldn't give to residents," Egan said.

Zoning board Chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the ZBA would hear the plan again, but the DPW was in a tough situation.

"It is difficult to get a variance from the town's bylaws unless certain criteria are met," DeGiacomo said. "As I recall, the town didn't meet any of the criteria."

The bylaw states that a variance may be granted if the rejection of the request "would deprive reasonable use of the structure," and if there are "unique conditions not the result of the applicant's actions."

Zoning board members determined that the size of the building and its proximity to the recycling and transfer facility leave no question as to the garage's purpose. The building is also visible from both directions on Cedar Street.

In its ruling, the zoning board pointed out that a smaller sign would serve the same function just as effectively as a large sign. The zoning board also ruled that the bylaw does not provide for any exceptions to the residential sign ordinance.

Citizen of Year nominations

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored the Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for his work with the Appalachia Service Project, an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1997 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Wednesday, Dec. 31. Please see the nomination form on page 35.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1997 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1998.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, firefighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy for a worthy Cohasset project or cause.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Private Ways appointment

Selectmen appointed James Grinnell, 130 Wheelwright Farm, to the Private Ways Committee this week.

Santa's coming to the Cohasset Village Fair Saturday

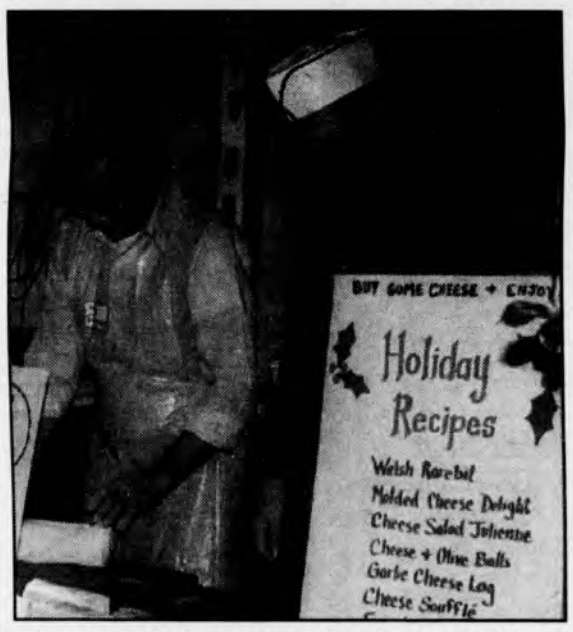
Santa Claus in his sleigh on the Cohasset Common, and a secret room at Saint Stephen's Church will be the top draws for youngsters bringing their parents to the Cohasset Village Fair, Saturday, Dec. 6, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Jolly St. Nicholas, following a tradition of many years, will arrive at the Common about 10:45 a.m. and get ready to hear the wish lists of scores of children while having their pictures taken for family scrapbooks.

Proceeds from Santa's appearance will go to help fund Cohasset's part in the Appalachian Service Project which sends as many as 80 local teens and adults to Kentucky yearly to work on homes there.

While Santa hosts some of the children, others will be seeking gifts for their parents in St. Stephen's Church "on the rock," there's a secret room where low cost gifts will be available for kids to give to their parents. Also, in Walton Rodgers Hall, children will find tables laden with affordable books keyed to their ages.

Everywhere, there will be activities that will interest children as well as adults. In the Town Hall, for instance, youngsters will be attracted to the spread of Greek pastries, while next door at the Congregational Church they can sample the chowda bar or buy gift items for their families.



The Unitarian Parish House will have a storehouse of attic and closet treasures in their Jumble Sale, while they are also offering special order fresh cut Christmas trees to be picked up the day of the Village Fair. Order before Dec. 6 at the Unitarian Parish House, 23 North Main St. (or by special arrangement the following day). Trees from 5 to 9 feet tall, and in thin, fat or full width, can be special ordered by calling Jodee Doyle at 393-9845. Buyers may then choose from a nice selection of that size tree the day they pick it up. All trees are $35.

This is the 57th edition of the Cohasset Village Fair, organized as a joint benefit for Cohasset churches and other local non-profit institutions. This year the Second Congregational Church is the coordinator, working with representatives of the groups to ensure that the attractions that have drawn hundreds from surrounding towns to start their holiday shopping here will go on as usual.

By the way, Donna and Bob, everyone cannot wait to see Greer!

CHAMPION SHOW JUMPER

We hope that everyone heard about Sydney Johnston and her show jumper horse "Saint Patrick;" they deserve a standing ovation! Sydney, a senior at Milton Academy, competed in the National Horse Show in Madison Square Garden recently and was among the top 10 medalists in the Rolex-Maclay National Championship for the ASPCA Horsemanship Classes. Sydney earned the honor by outperforming more than 60 other competitors! Her parents are Bob and Diane Johnston, who by the way are active amateur/owner show jumping competitors in the New England and Florida show jumping circuits themselves! We are sure to hear more about Sydney in the future, and we wish her every success in future shows! Congratulations!

There will be an open house and reception from 6 to 8 p.m.

Art collectors are always fascinated by his unique ability to transform common objects into radiant images that seem to glow from within his resplendent paintings and the unlimited possibilities they suggest appeal to the child in everyone.

A native of Boston, Morrissey lives on the South Shore with his wife and young son. He has worked as an award-winning illustrator for more than a decade, creating book covers to portray the stories of others. As evidenced by the incredible detail in his dazzling paintings, he is a master storyteller himself. Morrissey created both the original art and story for his critically acclaimed first book, and best-selling childrenís classic, "Ship of Dreams," published by Harry N. Abrams. His new book, "The Great Kettles " A Tale of Time," traces the continuing adventures of little Joey, the fictional hero of his tale.

that you pick up your fresh tree (that had to be ordered beforehand). This is the 57th edition of the Cohasset Village Fair, organized as a joint benefit for Cohasset churches and other local non-profit institutions. This year the Second Congregational Church is the coordinator, working with representatives of the groups to ensure that the attractions that have drawn hundreds from surrounding towns to start their holiday shopping here, will go on as usual.

BENEFIT AUCTION DEC. 6

Save some of your energy for that night (yes, we are still talking about Dec. 6), it is the 10th Annual Cohasset Chamber of Commerce Community Benefit Auction. It will be held at the community center, and will begin with a "down-home" franks 'n beans dinner from 6 to 7 p.m. The auction will begin at 7 and go on until 10 p.m., with proceeds benefiting the Appalachian Service Project, the Harborfest Committee, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Chamber. You will pick up some great holiday bargains and have a lot of laughs as well, so bring a friend! For more information, call the chamber of commerce at 383-1010.

STAR BALLERINA

Cohasset has the distinction of being able to boast about another ballet dancer who will be a star in the "Nutcracker" this year. Her name is Lauren Albanese and she will be a chocolate doll. Lauren will be 8 in January, everyone is so proud of her! "The Nutcracker" is at the Wang Center now through Jan. 4; it is grand, don't miss it! Be sure to give Lauren a round of applause when you go, or if you see her "around town."

RETIRING SOCCER COACH

Last week was the soccer banquet, and there was a big surprise for Larry Shultz! Larry announced his retirement as soccer coach, after being involved with the program for oodles of years - all of the gents he coached with were there to honor him (all but Jon Anderson who was a finalist in a soccer tournament where he coaches for Babson). Every person there knows how dedicated Larry is and how much he cares for the athletes and the game. He always did that extra thing to get the most of the kiddos, he made sure they tried as hard as they could. He knows every rule and regulation, every play imaginable - he is a super-hero in the soccer world and the world in general. His soccer knowledge and coaching will be missed by our athletes. He will undoubtedly still be spotted at games, and his students will still ask him soccer questions or stats in his classes, but his coaching days are all gone. Be sure to thank him for a job well done when you see him!

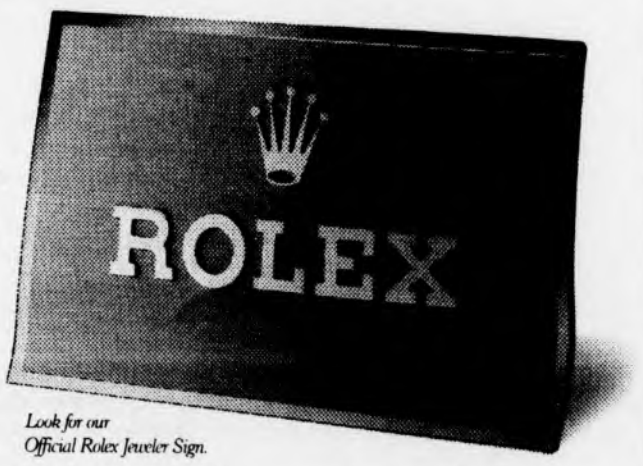
Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

BEGINNING WITH THE SPINE



A so-called back problem can potentially lead to major problems with internal organs. Displaced vertebrae, spasming back muscles, and swollen discs are all conditions which can exert pressure on nerves as they exit the spinal canal. The longer bones and muscles endure pressure and irritation, the more likely they will experience irreversible degenerative changes. Furthermore, pinched and irritated nerves are compromised in their ability to relay electrical impulses to muscles, connective tissue, and internal organs. Chiropractic's goal is to restore health to these tissues and organs by breaking the vicious cycle by which trapped nerves cause muscles to spasm, which compresses vertebrae, which squeezes the disc, which further traps the nerve.

P.S. Anecdotal evidence of the nervous system's relation to internal organs comes from elderly patients who say that severe lower back pain affects their bladders.

COHASSET MARINER

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

In the dark

We'd like to think the power outage Monday night short circuited selectmen's better judgment. That would be the easy answer. But we think the truth is probably more painful than that.

About an hour into Monday's meeting a tree limb on South Main Street landed on some wires plunging us and most of the town into darkness. The meeting continued long enough to finish the current agenda item and adjourned. The town manager went home and so did the selectmen's secretary.

Yet three selectmen, who constitute a quorum, remained at their seats and continued to have a chat in the dark with Town Counsel Paul DeRensis. They weren't talking about the Red Sox but town business. The "chat" focused on whether or not the T can take the Greenbush railroad right-of-way by eminent domain.

We warned selectmen their discussion was in violation of the Open Meeting Law because the meeting had adjourned. Rather than pack up, Selectman Diane Sullivan said discussion could continue because there had been no formal vote to adjourn the meeting. And Mr. DeRensis, saying he only wanted to talk individually with board members, didn't see anything wrong either.

As far as we know, there doesn't have to be a formal vote to adjourn a meeting. A "de facto" adjournment is enough. Some interested members of the public had left. So to continue the meeting (after announcing your adjourning) is at the very least a violation of the spirit of the law.

But we intend to file a formal complaint and let the district attorney's office decide.

The second issue is very clear cut. Any meeting that will include a quorum of any town board must be posted outside the town clerk's office at least 48 hours ahead of time.

Like most of us, Mrs. Sullivan had a busy weekend. She forgot to have the Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee meeting slated for Tuesday posted in time. When she asked the town clerk to post it Monday morning, the town clerk refused because she had missed the deadline. At that point, the issue should have died.

But when confronted by the Mariner Monday, Mrs. Sullivan was adamant that she intended to hold the "working session" anyway because it was paramount that the committee, on which she is a member, prepare for Wednesday night's session with the MBTA.

By Tuesday morning, she had had a change of heart and told us she had cancelled the meeting. While we're pleased Mrs. Sullivan decided not to break the law, it is unsettling to think the only reason the meeting wasn't held is because its legality was challenged by the press.

We hate to think what would have happened a year ago if the sewer commission had tried to hold a non-posted "working session" on the North Cohasset sewer district. Has Mrs. Sullivan, who fought so hard for North Cohasset to receive equity on the sewer issue, forgotten why she was elected?

Government is not a "club" where officials can decide who gets admitted or who hears what. Deliberately circumventing the Open Meeting Law through "casual chats" on town matters is not in the best interest of open government and the public's right to know.

And committees can't meet unless they follow the 48-hour posting rule spelled out in the law.

It's not always pleasant or convenient to deliberate under the watchful eye of the press and public. But a government of, by and for the people can't operate any other way. In light of Monday's breakdown, selectmen will have to work hard to dispel any perception that there's a lot of town business going on behind the scenes.

You as public citizens, and we as your paper, have to be on our game to make sure we're not being kept in the dark.

Author sought for town history

The Committee on Town History was commissioned by action of The Town of Cohasset Special Town Meeting vote on Article 25, Oct. 28, 1996, to write the third volume of the town's history from the year 1950 into the future year 2000, and we are searching for a professional author/writer who can present an interestingly written finished product with a publication target date for mid- to late 2001.

The length of the book, number of photographs, timeline, table of contents, etc., has not been determined at this time. However, Volume 1, by H. Bigelow, covers prehistory to 1898, 539 pages of text and photographs; Volume 2, B. Pratt covers 1898-1950, 312 pages of text and photographs.

A bound book is being considered as well as an electronic media version. Additionally, we will be incorporating the town history into the curriculum of the Cohasset Public Schools.

Although the eventual audience of this effort will be limited to the epicenter of Cohasset and those touched by the community of a beautiful small town, the author of this third volume of Cohasset town history will yield the tremendous longevity of local fame as authors Bigelow and Pratt have enjoyed during their lifetimes and beyond.

Currently, the committee has been gathering data from town reports, records, local newspapers, regional newspapers, local town historical society and all other appropriate sources., including the taping of interviews of area residents for their valued insights on this period.

Interested authors should call Wigmore A. Pierson at (781) 871-2854 for details on how to submit a Request for Proposal (RFP).

Town worries train work will worsen flooding

Nonetheless, Roebuck acknowledged her board was skeptical about approving any building in the basin, though the T does have a right of way there.

"They (meaning the T) were told that they would indeed have an impact. It isn't just the culverts, and it isn't just the village. It's the whole watershed," Roebuck said.

Wednesday, after the Mariner went to press, the T's key environmental manager Andrew Brennan came to meet with Cohasset officials to grapple with the James Brook and other Greenbush mitigation issues. Before he got there, however, Roebuck and some other local experts went on the record with their views about the T's readiness to deal with the Greenbush mitigation effort.

Though the point might seem too obvious to repeat, as former selectman Peter Pratt put it, filling in or building inside the flood plain ultimately means there will be less place for the water to go safely in a storm.

Moreover, the former Cohasset selectman is now raising questions about the ability of the T to call the shots on the controversial Greenbush train restoration project. In light of a $341,000 federal grant which the town expects to receive for flood control in the James Brook basin, the T probably will be obligated to step up their efforts to comply with the wetlands protection acts and answer questions about filling in portions of the flood plain, he said.

Pratt also said Wednesday he expects the MBTA will have to do more than T representatives have so far promised, if they intend to deal with the pressing conservation issues at stake in the James Brook basin.

Previously, the T had agreed to pay Cohasset for part of the James Brook flood control project but only if it could be shown that restoring service on the Greenbush line would impact flooding. Their study, produced by the engineering firm of Sverdrup Civil, Inc., found the restoration would have no impact.

However, that is a point very much disputed by Roebuck, Pratt and the town's engineering consultant Domenic Tutela of Tutela Engineering.

Tutela said he agreed with Pratt that the infusion of federal grant money would likely mean the T would have to do more than originally planned and contribute money, as promised, towards the flood control project.

Noting the T's right of way at Sohier Street was under water during the October flood, Tutela said Wednesday the T's studies had not been developed enough to the point where they could be fairly evaluated.

Search process begins for new superintendent

portant part of the job description."

In addition, Kidder offered suggestions on behalf of his search committee for some necessary qualifications for superintendent candidates.

First on his list is an ability to grapple with new technology. Kidder asserted that Hart's successor should have a good understanding of the changing face of technology, and the skills to prevent Cohasset from falling behind the times.

He also pointed out that, over the next three to five years, Cohasset's teaching staff will go through an unusually high rate of turnover due to several anticipated retirements. The new superintendent must be able to deal quickly with the issue of succession in light of this impending dilemma.

Kidder added that candidates will need the skills to build community support for the schools, assess organizational structures and procedures and have achieved a set level of education and experience.

It is yet undecided what type of professional experience the committee will look for, but Kidder recommended that the search not be limited to internal candidates.

"Our scope shouldn't be limited to those within or out of the school system." Kidder said. Rather, he asked that the scope of the search be determined by the job description. In other words, the committee should seek out candidates in a targeted manner, rather than passively allow candidates to seek out the committee.

Kidder also stated the importance of utilizing a consultant in the search. Consultants are crucial in opening and closing the replacement process, Kidder said.

While consultants offer assistance in assembling a job description and conducting initial screening of candidates, they are also invaluable in closing a deal, he explained.

"Many searches go awry at the end," he said, adding that a consultant can help to negotiate salaries and contract terms, issues that are often mishandled by those less familiar with the process.

"We don't think the school committee has the proper skill set or the time to conduct this search on its own," he said.

Although a consultant may be necessary, cost issues may limit the town's freedom to utilize outside help. The committee would then need to seek out members of the community who are willing and able to fill roles that the school committee itself would be unable to fill.

With or without a consultant, the search for a new superintendent may enlist community help in interviewing candidates. Kidder described one potential "interviewing" process which would require candidates to spend time with students, teachers and parents. The opinions of each group would then be considered when judging a candidate.

With so many issues at hand, the school committee may not have the luxury of time. Kidder asserted that the search must commence by January.

Recipe for success

Cohasset woman is published in Yankee magazine

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Julia Child and Cohasset resident Diana Kinch both share their cooking experiences in this month's Yankee Magazine, "In Praise of New England Cooking."

"I'm honored to be published in such a well-known magazine," said Kinch, an avid writer who has never before been published nationally. "It's an exciting thing that your word is out there and a scary thing that your word is out there, all at the same time."

Kinch's article, titled "From the vine: Tenderness is the secret," depicts a slice of her childhood spent with her family in the kitchen making wadeesh, or stuffed grape leaves. She describes the process from start to finish, a project involving the whole family.

"The dishes were long-range projects, works in progress," Kinch recalled of her upbringing in Brockton. "Everyone had certain jobs. It was a whole evolution of work with the family, which was the nice part."

Even though Kinch, her two sisters and brother are all grown up now, they still carry on the tradition of sharing the work of making a family meal. Kinch has lived in Cohasset for 10 years.

"Now when we have family get-togethers, everybody brings something," she said.

Seeing the family's cooking tradition forever preserved in the pages of a magazine pleased her parents and siblings, Kinch said.

"They got a kick out of it," she said. "It brings that whole time back into focus."

Kinch compares the art of cooking to the process of writing, to which she devotes much of her spare time. She has also been published in the Cohasset Mariner and the Patriot Ledger.

> "You put different things together, work it through and see how it comes out. Hopefully you get a good result."
> — DIANA KINCH ON WRITING AND COOKING.

"You put different things together, work it through and see how it comes out," she said. "Hopefully you get a good result."

A six-year member of the Kitchen Table writers' group, Kinch sent her article to Yankee two years ago at the insistence of one of her group members.

"She said to me, 'Just send it out!' and so I did," she said.

An editor at Yankee put Kinch's story on file and told her that when they decided to publish it in the magazine, she would get a phone call.

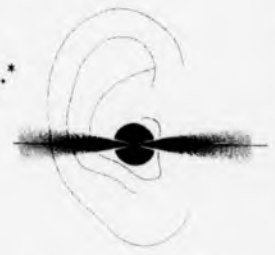
"I was so excited because I didn't get a refusal. They didn't say no. I took encouragement from that," she said.

Two years later, she has a byline in the "Special Collector's Issue."

"It was one of those lucky little things that happens," she said.

Her article as it appears in Yankee has been cut slightly to focus more on the food than on the history that Kinch had also included in the piece.

The recipe included at the end of her article is not her own; one main ingredient that would be in her family's recipe is missing from Yankee's, she said.



"Lemon juice makes the whole thing," she said. Yankee's photograph of the finished grape leaves, although not her own, looks exactly the way her family's grape leaves would look, she said.

An active member of the community and 10-year Cohasset resident, Kinch strives to write as much as possible and work toward more nationally published articles. Her bi-monthly writer's group helps her stay focused on that goal, she said.

"It's such a part of our lives," Kinch said of the Kitchen Table writers. "A lot gets done in terms of writing and understanding."

Full train service rolling on Old Colony lines

Transportation chief committed to building Greenbush

By Alice C. Coyle
STAFF WRITER

Just in time for the holiday shopping season, full service on the MBTA's two Old Colony commuter rail lines began last weekend. In addition to increasing South Shore commuters' daily transit options into Boston, state transportation officials are hoping that the expanded service will increase ridership on the new rail lines.

"Half the battle on starting a new service is to get people familiar with what we have to offer," said state Secretary of Transportation Patrick Moynihan, who met with the Mariner's editorial board last week to review the steady success of the new Old Colony railroad.

"We think we're on schedule in terms of the ridership we've seen," said Moynihan, who noted that since service began Sept. 29, the Plymouth line has carried about 2,000 passengers and the Middleborough line another 1,500 on the four daily round trips. Moynihan said the MBTA expects to carry 5,000 passengers on each line of the Old Colony railroad by the year 2000.

The expanded service includes 15 round trips into Boston from Kingston starting at 5:37 a.m., and 12 from Middleborough beginning at 5:25 a.m. during the week. The final train to Kingston departs South Station at 10:40 p.m. and the Middleborough-bound train gets underway at 10:30 p.m. Monday through Friday nights. On the weekend, the Plymouth line will offer eight round trips beginning at 7 a.m., with the final train departing for Kingston station from Boston at 10:40 p.m. On the Middleborough branch, weekend service will begin at 7:10 a.m. and the last train back will leave South Station at 10:30 p.m.

But despite the increased number of trains available to those bound for Boston, Moynihan said commuters shouldn't expect to see an immediate decrease in highway traffic.

"It's not like switching on a light switch," he said. "It takes people time to change their patterns of travel – their travel habits. And we have an obligation to make sure our service is as safe, reliable and efficient as possible."

In fact, state police officers from the Norwell barracks who patrol heavily traveled Route 3 from Plymouth to Braintee say they've seen no change in the daily rush hour gridlock since the Old Colony trains started rolling. But Moynihan said with the expanded service commuters will have more options and flexibility which will eventually have an impact on reducing traffic congestion on Route 3. Also, when the MBTA completes the third prong of the Old Colony project – the 17.7-mile Greenbush line, which is still under design, more traffic relief could be in sight, Moynihan noted.

Moynihan maintained that the state remains committed to building the $285 million Greenbush line and expects to have the final environmental review of the project completed by next July. Service is slated to begin in 2002.

The next hurdle to cross is to gain environmental permits from the Army Corps of Engineers, the lead federal agency reviewing the project, and Moynihan said the MBTA is carefully addressing the corps concerns. "We feel comfortable that the questions the corps has asked, we've been able to answer. Moynihan said the MBTA has not slowed momentum on the project, despite the lawsuit launched by Hingham to bring the project back under federal environmental review. Unlike the other two branches of the Old Colony Railroad, the T plans to pay for the Greenbush project with state money only.

Opposition to the coastal rail line has been vocal and relentless, but Moynihan said he remains convinced that a majority of Greenbush corridor residents want the rail.

Four Newtonville homes to be hooked up to the sewer town must upgrade its sewer treatment plant and expand the central Cohasset sewer district. The town also established a North Cohasset sewer district which will be hooked up to the Hull treatment plant.

The state/town accord also advanced some capacity to alleviate the stranglehold the sewer moratorium has had on parts of town including the village where some businesses were hamstrung by former wastewater caps.

After the board of health declared a state of emergency in the Newtonville area due to high fecal coliform counts on the surface last summer, several homeowners and the health board turned up the heat on the sewer commission to include Newtonville in the expanded sewer district approved at town meeting.

Audrey Hoholik, owner of 26 Atlantic Ave., said she and her husband are "beyond thrilled"with the news.

The process was a painful one for the Hoholiks who have been trying to sell their house which failed a Title V inspection. (Once a property fails Title V, the state environmental code, the owner has two years to fix the septic system which can be prohibitively expensive).

But in hindsight, Mrs. Hoholik said town officials "did the right thing" by forcing people to get an analysis done on their systems.

While Tutela Engineering, the sewer commission's consulting engineers, found no evidence of a public health emergency, it discovered the septic systems of the four lots (26, 26A, 30 and 36 Atlantic Avenue) in failure. Tutela said the area would not support an on-site septic system for the four homes.

Sewer commission Chairman Ted Guild said the next step is for town counsel to review the town meeting warrant article approved last spring. Town meeting voted to subsidize 50 percent of the central and North Cohasset sewer projects and the town subsequently approved an override to pay for it. It is not clear if the four Newtonville homes will pay 50 percent or 100 percent of the estimated $140,000 cost to run a sewer line from the houses in question to Elm Court.

Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said while the health board talked about seven homes in the neighborhood as candidates for the sewer, he was pleased the "worst ones" would be hooked up.

Guild said the process used for Newtonville makes it clear what steps need to be taken before considering any additional sewer hookups.

He explained that the state MEPA unit (Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act), which has oversight over the environmental aspect of the sewer project, must approve the project change to include the four homes.

New computer Internet service runs like a dream

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

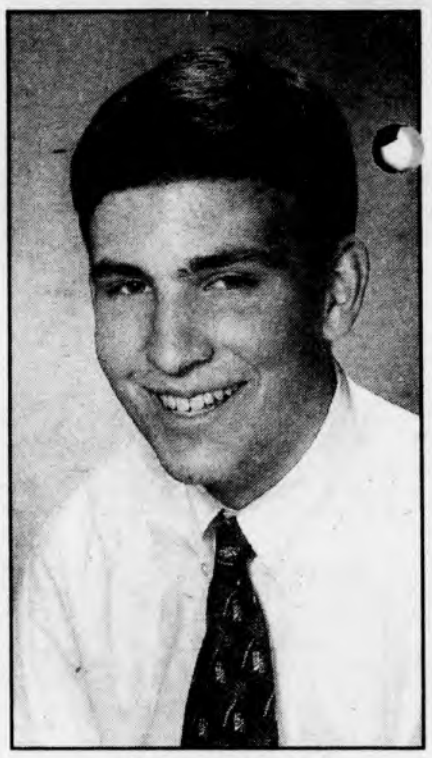
In today's high-tech world of computers, web pages, the Internet, search engines, mega bytes and the variety of other sophisticated services and equipment available to today's consumer, there isn't that much unusual about new companies springing up left and right. With an ever-increasing demand for these types of technologies, there is also not much unusual about these companies, growing at the astounding rate of 15 to 20 percent per month, as Cohasset-based Dream Communications Inc. is doing. What makes Dream Communications Inc. so unusual, is its founder and president, Aaron Sawchuk, who started the company at the age of 16 at the end of 1995.

Now, two years later, the company has seven full-time and five part-time employees including Aaron's father, Wayne Sawchuk, who put up the initial investment of more than $200,000 for the equipment and other start-up expenses which were needed to get Dream Communications Inc. off the ground. Today Aaron's company has more than 2,000 subscribers of which 80 to 85 percent are business accounts including the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, Comp USA, Hallmark 100; Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset Libraries; Hingham Police Department and scores of others. The company projects its sales will double within the next eight months.

"I'm very proud of what I've accomplished," Aaron said. "I had no idea it would be so successful. My initial projections were that the company would grow 3 to 5 percent per month, not 15 to 20 percent. I had no idea."

Aaron, who now is a senior at Cohasset High School and a member of the National Honor Society, is busy applying to universities and doesn't know whether or not he will return to Dream Communications Inc. after he graduates from college.

"I had no idea it would be so successful. My initial projections were that the company would grow 3 to 5 percent per month, not 15 to 20 percent. I had no idea."
— AARON SAWCHUK



Wayne is the first to admit that he doesn't know much about computers and that the company is Aaron's brain child. However, he does realize the tremendous room for growth. The first commercial web page came on line only four years ago and today less than 25 percent of all businesses are on the world wide web. Wayne is currently focusing on the structure of the company to allow for its rapid rate of growth and installing more and more professionals into its management team.

The company generates revenue by selling dial-up access, the resale of high speed access, multiple E-mail accounts for a single company, space for web site hosting for someone else's design and web site creations.

Aaron has been involved with computers since the age of 12 when he developed a plan to make money selling game software through a private bulletin board service called The Final Connection. The development of the Internet laid that idea to rest, for it provided the same games to the public free of charge, so he decided to go with the flow and came up with the idea of selling space on the Internet instead.

Now, Aaron, who is only allowed to spend time at the office, located at 231 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., from when he gets out of school to 6:30 in the evening, and some time on the weekends, has gotten away from the day-to-day technical operations of the company because of the constraints of his school homework on his schedule.

Dream Communications Inc. now has access numbers in towns all over Massachusetts, including Braintree, Dedham, Easton, Bridgewater, Foxboro, Hingham, Kingston, Cambridge, Boston, Malden, Roxbury, Waltham, Woburn, Gloucester, Lowell, Lynn, Lynnfield, Salem, Topsfield, Newbury, Catument, Chatham, Dennis, Fall River, Marion, Wellfleet, Ayer, Charlton, Gardner, Petersham, Townsend, Franklin, Holden, Holliston, Maynard, Northboro and Whitinsville.

Aaron Sawchuk

When asked if he and Aaron ever butt heads with each other on how the company should be run, Wayne said, "Most adults underestimate the capabilities of young people and sometimes we have to stand back and let them be heard to see if their ideas make sense.

"Aaron has always been an entrepreneur and he is incredibly ambitious and if it was possible he would have the company growing even faster than it is now," he said.

COHASSET MARINER

An ill wind takes down the Skippers

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

On a cold, blustery Thanksgiving Day in Hull, the Cohasset Skippers suffered a 50-6 beating at the hands of the Hull Pirates.

In the wake of last year's 49-6 loss, Cohasset figured to play their way into a close game, but Hull dominated and had secured their win by the end of the first quarter. Bob Carreiro carried for five touchdowns on a day in which it was all but impossible to throw the ball.

However, the Skippers' lone score came when quarterback Pat Hurley fired a strike to end Jamie Buick for six.

The game started with a peculiar decision by Cohasset, as Hull won the coin toss and elected to kick-off, and the visiting Skippers chose to receive facing the wind. With gusts well over 50 miles per hour, Hull pinned the Skippers in the shadow of their own goalposts.

There were10 kickoffs throughout the course of the game, and six of them were touchbacks, including both of Cohasset's John Kasameyer's, which sailed out of the end zone, unheard of in a high school game.

Hull played the field position game and, with the howling wind at their backs, controlled the first quarter. The visitors caught their wind, literally, in the second quarter and slowed the Hull attack, but the fired-up Pirates kept pushing across scores.

Cohasset took advantage of the wind again in the third quarter, pushing their one score across. Cohasset adjusted their offensive strategy for the game, and ran an option frequently throughout the game.

Hurley would either keep the ball or pitch to running back Justin Golden. Both Hurley and Golden played well, as did fullback Andy Hamilton, who ran interference for his teammates.

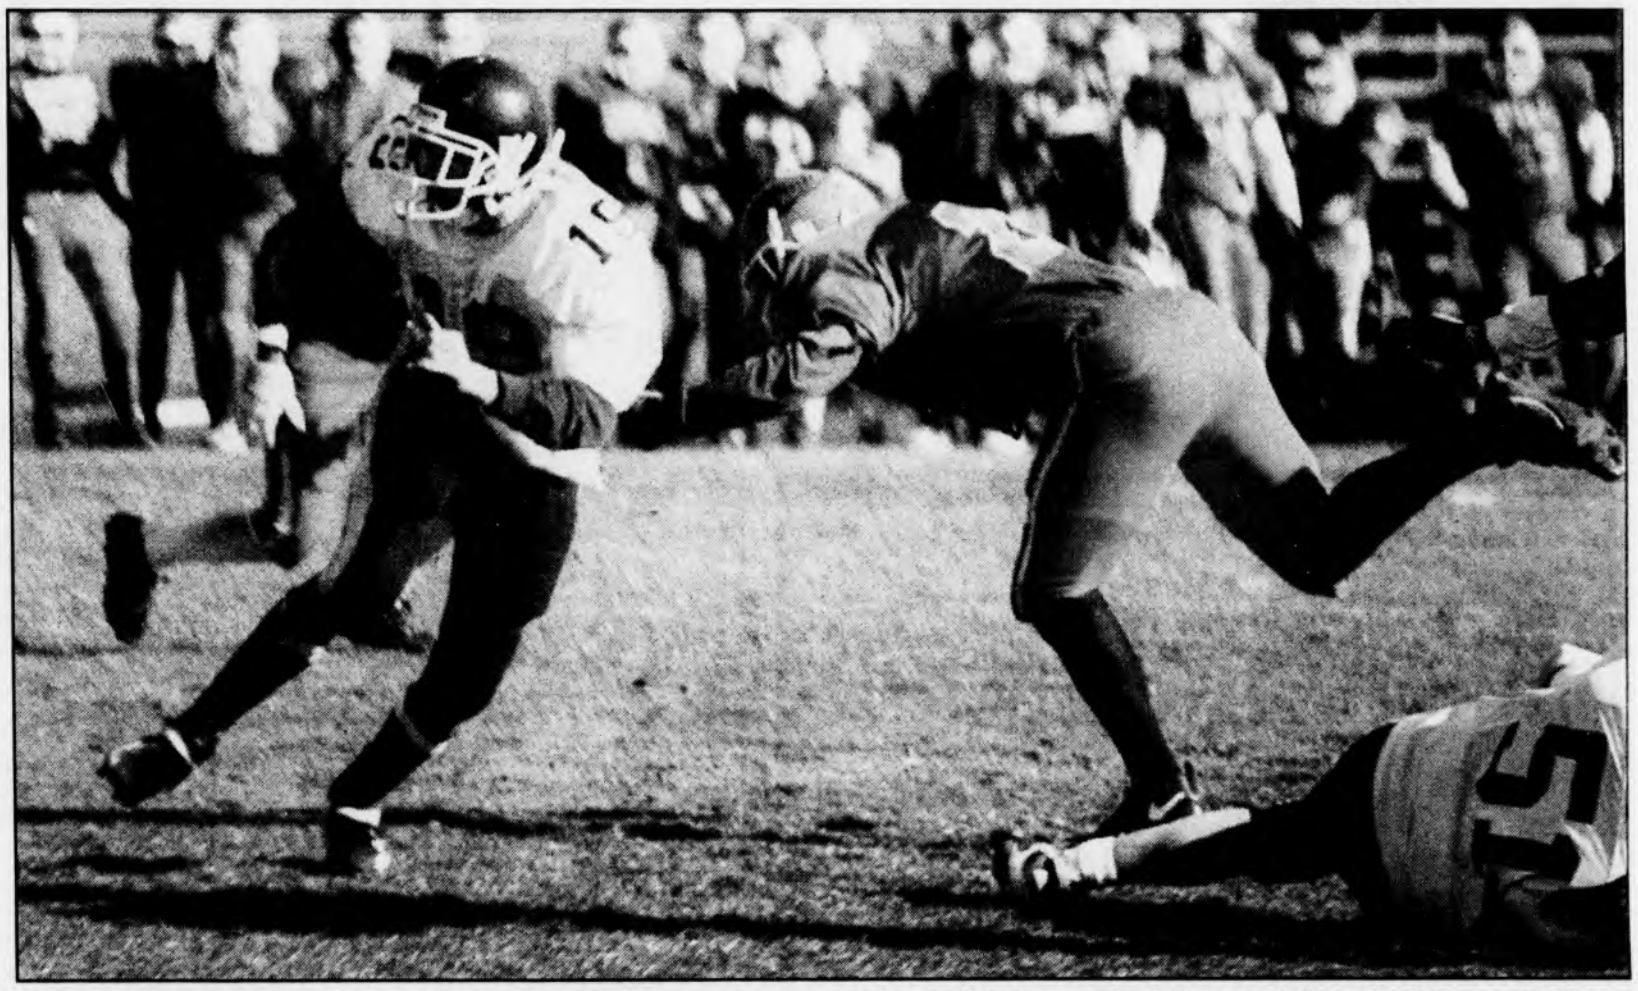
Hurley was also accurate despite the wind, finding Buick for a couple receptions and tight end Sean Parkinson, who snared a Hurley pass and ran for 20 yards after the catch.

Two more balls were muffed by Skipper receivers.

The offensive line gave Hurley its best pass protection of the year, as tackles Jim O'Sullivan and John Kasameyer, guards John Considine and Adam Sasso, and center J.P. Laugelle tried to stave off a blitzing Hull defense.

On defense, the Skippers showed signs of excellence, particularly from the underclassmen. Golden made some nice sticks, and junior Patt Murphy caused a fumble, which was recovered by Liam O'Donnell. Senior Daryl Jones helped clog up the middle as Cohasset has done all year, and force runners to the outside. Sasso filled his role as linebacker nicely and Sean Parkinson regularly found his way into the Hull backfield, particularly in the first half.

Cohasset's best area of play may have been their special teams, a category which was all but nullified by the superior kicking conditions for both teams. Kasameyer's soaring kicks bounded through the back of the end zone and Hull's often did the same.



Returners Ben Ketchum and Ben Roine did their best to track down the pigskin, but high kicks were toyed with the by gusts.

Blocking by Dan Mulligan and Bill Kearney, among others, gave Ketchum and Roine to judge the kicks.

Raheem Shepard fielded two kicks and returned one for 25 yards and appeared destined for a solid gain on the next when his knee was ruled down on a questionable call.

The game was the last high school contest for seniors Jamie Buick, Andy Hamilton, Pat Hurley, Daryl Jones and John Kasameyer. All five of these players performed admirably this season and nursed the most out of their potential.

As their teammate, I can attest to how difficult and disappointing a season it was for them, but they all handled it with class, setting an excellent example for next year's team.

Cohasset QB Pat Hurley looks around in vain for an opening in the Hull defense. The Skippers fell to the Pirates 50-6 in this year's Thanksgiving Day game.

For the past few years, Cohasset High School's athletic facilities have undergone a number of dramatic changes. Milliken Field's baseball diamond was rebuilt and is being enhanced continuously.

The state of the art alumni field has been enticing enough to visiting towns that soccer teams requested the new field as a neutral site for tourney games.

The encircling track endured its first season last spring and receives extensive use by members of the community.

Grads gather to remember the perfect season of 1957

As the Hull Pirates were having their way with the hometown team on Thanksgiving Day, one could only look back fondly of when these same two teams met 40 years again with a greatly different result.

The members of the 1957 Cohasset football team that completed the year with a perfect record were back in town over the holiday weekend for a combined class reunion for the years of 1958 thru 1961 at Kimble's-by-the-Sea.

During that memorable 1957 season the Local students making waves

Some former athletes from Cohasset have been making news at the college level.

•Former soccer stars Chris Kondrat and Erik Henry are together at Bowdoin College, where they played a part in helping their team to the most wins in a season ever at the school and a spot in the recent NCAA soccer tourney.

Kondrat is a senior and Henry a sophomore.

•Turning to hoops, Joe Slotnick is expected to be a big player for Vassar College this year. A junior captain on the team, Slotnick was named the team's best defensive player last season when they finished 12-13.

•Slotnick's former teammate Ryan Bishop will also be making some news on the Plymouth State College basketball scene. The 6'8 freshman is expected to make an immediate impact on the team this season in the frontcourt as either a center or a forward.

•Next we turn to the mats at Plymouth State, where Nathan Caldwell is expected to make an impact on the heavyweight division. Caldwell is a sophomore on the squad, which was ranked 4th in the pre-season New England Division III coaches poll and ninth in the all-division regional poll.

Basketball program needs your help

The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.

Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years.

Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away.

Basketball registration for boys and girls grades 1-8, is scheduled for Saturday, Nov. 15, 9 a.m.-11 a.m., Town Hall.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

However, CHS AD Clark Chatterton has now turned his attention to the finer things, the flourishing details. A press box has been installed, allowing coaches, announcers and statisticians to watch the game from a bird's eye view.

Chatterton is planning to have dugouts put in on the baseball field, and a 30-foot high light-house is in the planning process, flashing "1-4-3" to greet arriving fans.

Another project which has already been started is the "Sidewalk of the Stars," which has met with success. However, since it is an ever expanding project, there is always room for more.

To encourage additions, Chatterton has offered to sell any brick with a two-line message on it to a CHS athlete for $45 from now until Christmas. For example, a brick could read Bill Kearney, Football; or Pat Murphy, "The Playmaker."

If you are interested in purchasing a brick in the sidewalk, call Katie Brister at 383-2439, Rob Buckley at 383-0171, Carolyn Pratt at 383-0048, or Kelly Tufts at 383-6985.

These four students are all students in one of Mr. Chatterton's gym classes and have volunteered to help with the project.

Chatterton hopes that this opportunity will boost the sidewalk's progress as well as offer Cohasset athletes a unique chance to preserve their place in history.

The sidewalk is yet another step in the continuing enhancement of Cohasset High's sports facilities.

Skippers defeated Hull 16-0 on their way to undefeated glory.

This party was not just for the football squad. Cheerleaders and other classmates attended the reunion as well.

Cohasset Athletic Director Clark Chatterton, himself a CHS graduate during that time period, was a driving force behind putting this event together, along with fellow graduates Grace Wilkin and Katherine Becker.

Chatterton expected that more than 120 people would make their way back for the occassion. Many of the graduates have statyed and put down roots in the area, but it was expected that people would be coming from as many as 31 states to attend the event.

As part of the festivities Chateron presented the graduates with a video collage of how much the town has changed in the past 40 years as well as shots of the team in action.

Besides Chatterton, another graduate from those classes who has seen a lot of the changes around town first-hand is businessman Gary Vanderweil, who was one of the leading behind the creation of Alumni Field and the renovations to the sports complex that surrounds the high school.

Junior lacrosse program looking for a few good coaches

Thanks to phenomenal growth in popularity and interest, the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse Club is in need of additional coaches for the Spring 1998 season. No lacrosse experience is necessary.

The reason the team can take coaches without experience is the structure of its league, the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Association, the largest youth league in the country. The league allows communities to have more than one entry, and then allows multiple teams to be scheduled so that they always play in the same place — either home or away together — on the same day.

We need a helping hand more than we need an experienced hand."

Jaffe explains that the biggest need is for a coach to assist during practices, when the only way to install an offense or defense is in small groups of players. "The rest of the kids should be doing drills or installing the same offense at the other end of the field, but that's not possible without a second or possibly a third coach," he says.

Last year, the Cohasset junior lacrosse team had 30 players, a high number within the Mass Bay youth teams. This year, thanks to a successful summer camp and increased awareness and interest, Jaffe expects closer to 40 children in grades 5 and 6 to sign up. Without at least one additional coach, Jaffe says he might have no choice but to limit the program to a single team of 30 players signed up on a first-come, first-served basis.

With sign-up set for December and the league needing notification of Cohasset's intention to field a second team by January, the program needs to hear from volunteers now. The Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League also holds a winter coaches clinic that volunteers may want to attend.

For this spring, Jaffe plans to practice the junior lacrosse program at or after 4:30 p.m. on Mondays and Fridays. Games are Sunday afternoons. Practice begins as weather permits in march, and the season ends Father's Day weekend in June.

For more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program and becoming a volunteer coach, contact Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0332.

Puppet show at community center

Kids can kick off the holiday season at the South Shore Community Center Saturday, Dec. 6, when the Ha'Penny Theater presents Mr. Bear's Christmas. Puppets, costumed characters and live actors bring environmentally friendly stories to life, as children participate in skits, songs and dances.

The larger-than-life Mr. Bear barges into every Christmas party impersonating Santa Claus. When Ranger Pat pulls off his beard, he admits to the ruse, and begins to tell stories.

Mr. Bear opens a Christmas present to find a 100 percent recycled magic coat, guaranteed never to wear out. Bear learns the meaning of reusing and recycling, as his coat transforms into many other useful items. After going through his Christmas stocking, Mr. Bear begins to make breakfast from an egg. Ranger Pat stops him just in time, and the story of the Whooping Crane begins. Lucille, the dog, performs a poem about sharing, with the assistance from an audience volunteer. Mr. Bear recounts Mem Fox's story, Koala Lou. Finally, Grandfather Frost shows how Russia celebrates Christmas by getting everyone on their feet to dance the Troika. The show ends with dancing and bear hugs. Cookies and punch will be served.

Ha'penny Theater has toured extensively throughout the country, performing in arts festivals, parks series, children's' museums and on the "Follow That Dream" children's series on WMUR TV. The theater was founded in 1981, and is based in Rye, N.H.

Tickets for the Dec. 6, 10:30 a.m. show are on sale at the South Shore Community Center's Office, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, Monday through Friday 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tickets are $8 per child, adults come free of charge. For more information, call 383-0088.

Lights to encircle Paragon carousel

As the days grow shorter and the nights longer the Friends of the Paragon Carousel are again planning to encircle the former Paragon Park Carousel on Nantasket Beach with hundreds of lights in the enduring spirit of winter holiday spirit and in celebration of the continuing effort to keep the Carousel at Nantasket Beach. Begun three years ago as part of the grass-roots effort to keep the Carousel from being auctioned off by its previous owners, the Carousel of Lights will this year extend through Jan. 6, the 12th night of Christmas.

For every $5 donation received during this time period the Friends will light another light bulb on one of the multiple strands of lights which have been strung around the Carousel. As donations grow, so too will the circle of lights around the Carousel until, as in the past two years, the Carousel is completely encircled in lights.

Sponsorship of a light or lights may be made in the donor's name or in the name of a loved one. All donors or honorees will be published in a Carousel Donors list.

In addition to the Carousel of Lights, the Friends have recently launched a major capital campaign to retire the debt incurred when the Friends purchased the Carousel in April of 1996.

Donations should be sent to Friends of the Paragon Carousel "Carousel of Lights," P.O. Box 100, Hull 02045.

Masonic awareness night

Konohasset Lodge, A.F. & A.M., will hold a Masonic awareness event Friday evening, Dec. 5, at the Masonic building, 7 Brook St.

This informative program will be held at 7:30 p.m. with several guest speakers. The topic will describe "What it means to be a Mason" today. The Lodge hopes those who are interested in learning more about freemasonry will attend. Questions and discussion will follow.

The Lodge also extends an invitation to a light supper, reservations required as room is limited. For more information about this event as well as making your reservation, please call event chairman Robert N. MacNeill, 383-1760. Dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. and the event will be held at 7:30 p.m.

Black nativity trip slated

The Cohasset Metco Committee is sponsoring a matinee trip to Black Nativity Sunday, Dec. 21. This joyful Christmas musical is a gospel rendition of the birth of the Christ Child and a cultural gem not to be missed.

The National Center of Afro-American Artists is presenting its 28th season of Langston Hughes' gospel song play Black Nativity at Tremont Temple's Converse Hall, 88 Tremont St., Boston. This year, Deer Hill School fourth-grade Metco student Manasseh Remy and his younger brother Emyr are both members of the Black Nativity cast.

Bus transportation will be provided to and from this joyful Christmas musical free of charge. There will be a central location in Boston where the Cohasset bus will stop to pick up Boston families en route to Tremont Temple. The bus will leave Cohasset Town Hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 p.m. matinee performance and return to Cohasset before 7 p.m.

Tickets are $25 per person and should be reserved as soon as possible by calling PSO Reps. Connie Afshar at 383-6006, or Jean Hajjar at 383-9917.

Churches to help the homeless

The First Parish in Cohasset enthusiastically applauds the partnership St. Stephen's Church has with Habitat for Humanity to sponsor the building of a home in Quincy Point. In support of St. Stephen's commitment to raise $50,000 as sponsor, First Parish, which provides a homeshare apartment in its Parish House, will donate the proceeds from its annual Christmas concert. The concert will be held Dec. 14 at 4 p.m. in the Meeting House on the Common.

This will be the 19th Christmas concert for First Parish, each one of which has raised funds, now totaling almost $30,000, for worthy causes such as The Quincy Crisis Center, Rosie's Place, DOVE and Wellspring Multi-Services. As before, the concert will feature the Unicorn Singers, directed by Margo Euler. This year they will present "A Spanish Christmas," featuring carols from many Spanish-speaking countries. A highlight will be "Carols and Lullabies: Christmas in the Southwest," by the acclaimed American composer Conrad Sousa, with accompaniment by guitar, keyboard and marimba. The program will also include a collection of a cappella dance carols with exciting percussion, as well as familiar Spanish carols for all to sing together.

To become a patron requires a gift of $40 or more, which brings two tickets by return mail or to pick up at the First Parish office at 23 North Main St., 383-1100. Office hours are 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Advance tickets at $8 are on sale at the First Parish office. Tickets at the Meeting House door Sunday, Dec. 14, will be $10.

'Making peace with the holidays'

The holiday season is now upon us. For many, these are joyous days of celebration. Yet for some of us, this natural time of reflection can easily become filled with anxiety and even depression. If you feel prone to this type of quiet sadness, or even just need a few moments to regroup, First Parish of Cohasset would like to offer you an opportunity to recapture some inner peace.

On Tuesday, Dec. 9, at 8 p.m., The Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox will be holding a very special service for those of us in search of a little extra quiet time; a time to reflect on the past, to find solace in present, even a time to envision a more fulfilling future.

This time of year can be difficult and, during her time in Middleboro, Tarbox discovered that this kind of service can provide a welcome break from the hectic pace most of us feel forced to keep up during the holidays. It can also simply be a calming, healing moment to savor as we end one year and begin another.

Please join the church next Tuesday evening for what is hoped will be an annual tradition at First Parish.

Student director tackles musical 'Annie'

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Brian Krupczak and Katie Roche stepped on stage this week, but mostly to talk over character motivation and walk through one of the big scenes in the musical "Annie."

It's the scene when that somewhat cold captain of industry dubbed Daddy Warbucks comes up with a hug, and it should be the heart of the production— perhaps even a scene that stops a show as heartwarming as "Annie."

Yet, according to teen director Ron Nicynski, it's also a scene that is so often misplayed, it can seem weirdly pointless to an audience.

Nicynski, 17, is not about to let the actors or the audience miss the point of the scene when the Cohasset Plays By the Sea production of "Annie" is mounted next month.

> "It's not like working with a 17-year old. He's very focused. He's very professional."
> — DANCE TEACHER JANET CAMPBELL.

The Cohasset High student will direct a cast of 90 in the Jan. 16, 17 and 18 performances of the show, and his enthusiasm for the stage was mighty evident this week during a Monday night rehearsal at the Cohasset High auditorium. Part of the excitement Monday was sparked by sharing ideas about the characters with the cast.

For instance, Brian, 14, had some good ideas about the way Warbucks should be played.

"We've seen him strong, cruel. We've seen him with an attitude," the director reminded the actor.

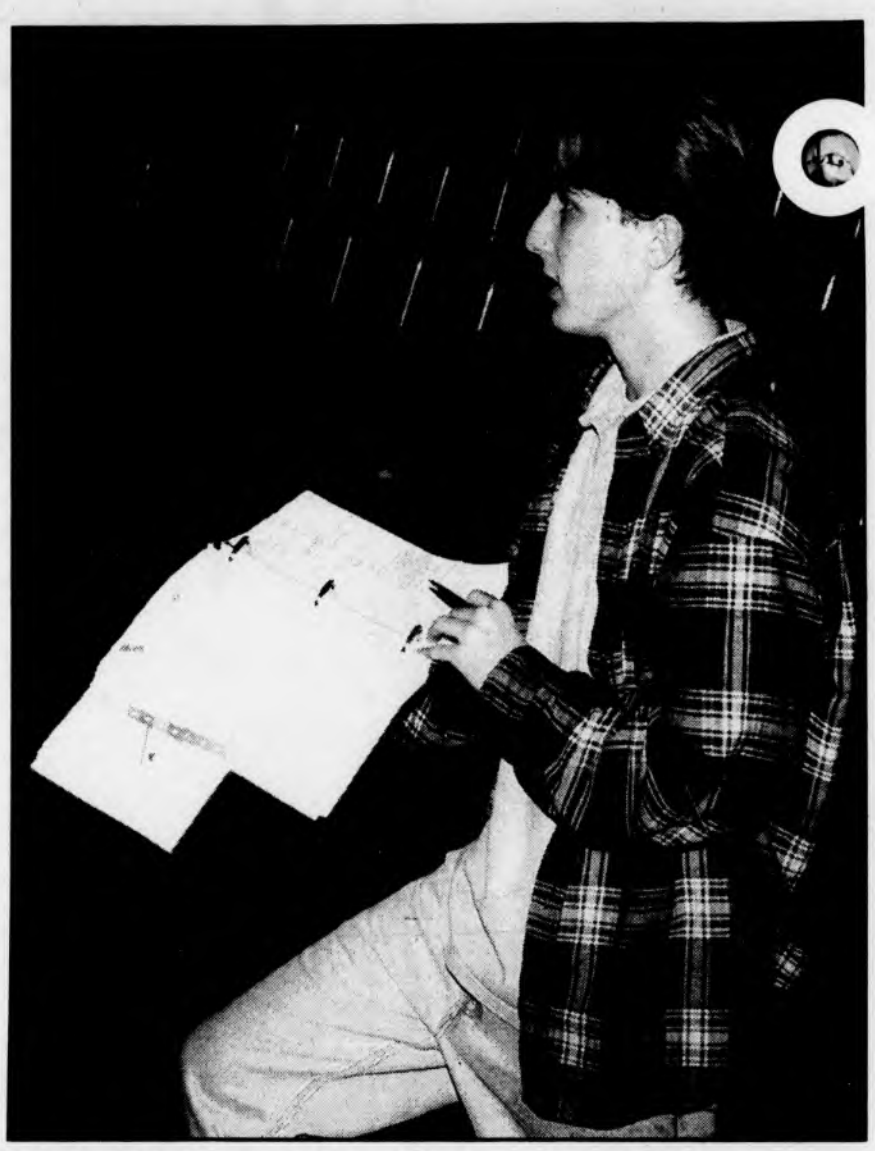
"I'm going to make him more compassionate by the end of the play," Brian promised. "I'm going to make him more understanding."

As Brian worked over the song in which Warbucks confesses something has been missing in his life, in spite of his success, both his co-star Katie, 11, and Nicynski explored the character's feelings, practically word by word.

"Maybe, he's feeling a little empty," Katie offered.

Then it was time for the action as the Nicynski directs Brian to look at Katie and take her hand. After a few practice box steps in a waltz, dance teacher Janet Campbell stepped in and took over the choreography.

Though Nicynski blocks out the small dance scenes, he relies on Campbell for the big numbers and frequently tells the choreographer the look he wants.



"This is the feeling. This is the attitude," he explained, going over the run of emotions that has the characters both up and down in the scene.

Campbell said working with Nicynski was not like anything she expected.

"It's not like working with a 17-year old," Campbell said. "He's very focused. He's very professional."

While Nicynski worked with the lead and the co-star on the fine points, another group of budding actresses and dancers practiced their steps backstage. Though they are not yet stars, some won bigger parts than they expected, and some will tread the boards for the very first time.

"All of them have talent," the director said. "I just have to tap into their talents and let them shine in their own way."

Student director Ron Nicynski is hard at work during a rehearsal of 'Annie' being produced by Cohasset Plays by the Sea.

Musical to feature 'real' Sandy

W.C. Fields said never work with kids or dogs, but Ron Nicynski is ignoring the comic's advice. In addition to the Cohasset youngsters in the play, there is also a dog to play "Sandy." "The audience loves it when there's a dog in the show," the director said, and "Annie" star Katie Roche has no doubt putting this dog in the show is the right thing to do. Ironically, "Sandy" will be played by a dog whose name is also "Sandy," and the dog has plenty of talent, Katie said.

"If you say 'Kisses,' it gives you kisses," she explained.

Village Fair kicks off the season

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

Over the years, Cohasset has celebrated its Village Fair on the town common, a joint benefit for Cohasset churches and other local non-profit organizations. This Saturday marked the 57th year. From 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. the three churches around the common hosted benefits, as well as the town hall, which housed the wreath sale for The Nativity of the Panagia Greek Orthodox Church located on Jerusalem Road.

Kerri Luise, a volunteer from the Greek Church, was in charge of selling the 100-plus hand-made wreaths and said that business had been brisk and they were down to only about a dozen wreaths inside the town hall by about 1 p.m. There was a jumble sale and large bake sale set up where authentic Greek pastries could be purchased.

At St. Stephen's Church a wide assortment of delectable baked goods, all baked by church members, were being offered for sale. A very talented pianist played seasonal hymns, while shoppers mulled through

Homeowners outraged over septic district

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Planning board member Robert Sturdy did not mince words when he addressed the sewer commissioners Tuesday night. Holding a battered wallet in one upturned palm, Sturdy accused the town of hanging "136 households out to dry." Then he went even further and compared the state of Massachusetts to Nazi Germany.

Sturdy was not the only angry man in the Town Hall. He and the 65 other homeowners who packed the auditorium were upset because they found out last month they soon could be facing septic system repair bills mounting as high as $70,000 plus regular expenses every seven years to have their septic systems inspected.

In all, 136 homeowners recently found out their property's septic system or cesspool has been tagged for special inspections and monitoring in an on-site wastewater management district.

Tuesday, as fingers were jabbed and pointed in numerous directions, it was nonetheless hard to find out exactly who to blame.

"Maybe itís time to say to hell with the Statehouse," Sturdy shouted as he struggled to pin down exactly which agency and individuals decided 136 property owners in Cohasset had to be in such a district.

Monument plans sail by selectmen

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Nearly 150 years ago two young assistant lightkeepers lost their lives when the original Minot Light toppled in a ferocious gale.

And now thanks to the undying effort of a beloved local lobsterman., there will be a monument dedicated to the two Cohasset men on Government Island.

The circular, 12-foot-in diameter compass rose, which is the brainchild of Herb Jason, 85, will feature a three-foot high polished block granite stone that will be inscribed with a rendering of the lighthouse and the story of what happened that fateful night.

Selectmen approved Jason's plan this week over the objections of the Cohasset Historical Commission and the Government Island Study Committee. Both those groups thought installing a memorial plaque on the side of the Minot Light Replica would be a fitting tribute to the two men.. They were also concerned that Jason's plan was too grand for the town park which has limited open space.

"There is tremendous symmetry in that little park," said Robert M. Davenport of the GISC. "We ought to be careful what we put in there. There is not a lot of space."

But they were out-manned Monday when Jason — accompanied by friends, relatives, a professional grant writer and schematics of the monument — easily won selectmen over.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Teen Center is meeting topic

Members of the Cohasset Teen Center board, the recreation department and teenagers behind the garage project have been rescheduled to meet with selectmen Monday night to discuss future plans.

They were previously scheduled for Dec. 1 but that meeting had to be postponed when the electricity went out at town hall during the meeting.

This week, Selectman Nan Roth said establishing the position of youth director under the auspices of the recreation department might the be best way to coordinate youth activities in town.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said there seemed to be a lot of groups going down parallel paths so some coordination might be necessary.

The existing Teen Center is run by a non-profit organization, Cohasset Youth Resources, Inc.

However, organizers of the new teen center, which is planned for the old DPW garage in the town parking lot, want to form a separate organization.

"We want a fresh canvas," Tony Bramblett said last week at an impromptu meeting outside the selectmen's office after the electricity went out. "We don't want to be under that umbrella."

Unhappy with Mariner editorial

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan criticized last week's Cohasset Mariner editorial which alleged selectmen were breaking the open meeting law by discussing town business after adjourning their regular meeting. He said the editorial was "reaching" and creating controversy where none existed. He also said it was unfair and inappropriate to single out Selectman Diane Sullivan, whom he said made an "honest error" in not posting a meeting of the Greenbush Mitigation Committee in time. State law requires all meetings be posted at the town clerk's office 48 hours in advance. The mitigation meeting in question was not held.

Town meeting warrant is open

Selectmen officially opened the warrant for the March 28 annual town meeting on Monday. Citizen petition articles must be submitted for the annual and special town meeting warrants by Monday Jan. 12.

All other articles must be submitted by Thursday, Jan. 15, Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

The annual town election is April 4. The last day to submit nomination papers to the board of registrars to be placed on the election ballot is Thursday, Feb. 12.

Between working at the Lincoln Street Mobil Station in Hingham and the Best Buy Warehouse, State Sen. Robert Hedlund racked up enough hours in high school to earn money to buy a car and put himself through college.

But what amounted to more than 32 hours and five days a week, more than five hours a day, and working after 8 p.m. without adult supervision, the Weymouth Republican's work schedule would have been considered illegal under a new legislative bill set to chop the number of hours teenagers can work during the school year.

"Myself and another Hingham High student were responsible for running a gas station from 4 to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday. We also ran it all weekend. That would have been illegal under this bill," he said.

Legislators, educators and business professionals agree Massachusetts' child labor laws allowing 16- and 17-year-olds to work nine hours a day and 48 hours a week during the school year are antiquated and reminiscent of 19th century when children dropped out of school to earn a living, what kinds of changes are called for have been a source of debate.

A bill filed by the state joint committee on commerce and labor sets those changes at maximums of five hours a day and 32 hours a week during the school year. It continues to allow nine hours a day 48 hours of work per week during the summer months.

As it stands, the bill gives more leeway than original proposals put forth last spring by the Massachusetts Attorney General Child Labor Task Force Executive Report which called for limiting the work hours of 16- and 17-year-old employees to four hours a day and 28 hours a week during the school year.

As for 14- and 15-year-old employees, the bill simply brings Massachusetts in line with federal law.

"Thirty-two hours a week and five hours a day is certainly more palatable," said Hedlund, who serves on the joint committee on commerce and labor and awaits the bill's introduction to the Senate ways and means committee — on which he also serves.

> MARY BABAIAN, GUIDANCE COUNSELOR

"As far as the initial proposal, there are no other words to describe it than ridiculous, unrealistic, and unfair. It displayed no common sense," he said.

Other debates — on capital punishment and electric deregulation — put the teen work bill on the back burner this legislative session. However, it sits in the House ways and means committee and is expected to come before the Legislature sometime next session.

"I'm pleased. This bill is a real compromise," said state Rep. Tom O'Brien, D-Kingston, who sits on the commerce and labor committee. "Forty-eight hours was too much but 28 hours was not quite enough."

In Cohasset, about two thirds of high school seniors hold part-time jobs that run the gamut from baby-sitting to high-tech jobs and range from eight to 30 hours per week, said guidance counselor Mary Babaian. While carrying a full course load, some students participate in after-school activities in addition to working part time, she added.

Most students, because they want to continue working, find ways to manage their time appropriately between school work and their jobs, she said.

"It depends on the kid and how well-organized he or she is and how much he or she works," Babaian said.

As for the bill, Babaian said she sees both sides of the issue.

"Sure there are some kids being taken advantage of and they need to be protected," she said "But part of it is that sometimes kids — maybe not in Cohasset or Scituate — but some kids really need to work to help support their families. It's hard to legislate that." While 17-year-old Jeff DeMontigney of Scituate says the bill as it stands does not seem unreasonable, he's not so sure it's up to the state to decide how many hours teenagers can work.

"I think kids should be able to work as many hours as they want as long as they get everything else done and take care of all their responsibilities," said the Scituate High School senior who works between 20 and 30 hours a week at Harbor House of Pizza in Scituate.

Hedlund, likewise, says its not up to government to dictate how many hours teenagers can work.

"It's the primary responsibility of the parents... A piece of paper we pass as law is not necessarily the way to effect change... It's up to the parents and to a certain degree the schools," he said.

Meanwhile, Hedlund says he managed his responsibilities and a full-work week just fine in high school.

"It didn't impact my studies. If anything, it made me a better person. It instilled in me a work ethic and a sense of responsibility. Not coming from a wealthy family, it allowed me to earn money to buy a car and put myself through school," he said.

Unlike Hedlund, however, Jeff said the proposed bill would not affect him because he never works more than five hours a day during the school week and banks the bulk of his hours on the weekends.

"But some people might need to work more. Some people need more money than others. If they need to work 40 hours a week, let them," said Jeff, who is putting money he earns toward college tuition.

Clocking in versus hitting the books for teenagers

Eileen Goode of Duxbury agrees.

While she works a maximum of 10 1/2 hours a week and five hours a day during the school year at the town library, she knows it's not that way for all teenagers.

"Obviously I don't work close to 32 hours a week, but I think some people really need to work a lot of hours. I think there are situations where teenagers really need to make that money and it's unfair to say the law is in their best interest," Eileen said.

As it stands, the teen work bill includes a hardship waiver amendment to provide for those students who need to work more than 32 hours a week for economic needs.

According to the task force report, between 20 and 30 percent of working teenagers are employed because of economic need. State Rep. Robert Koczera, chairman of the joint commerce and labor committee and a sponsor of the bill, says the particulars of that waiver, have not yet been ironed out.

The New Bedford Democrat sat on the task force before the proposals went to his committee, through which the amendments were added.

Eileen says a hardship waiver is necessary but is suspect of one without details.

"It's a great disservice when bills and laws leave some things vague," she said, adding ambiguity can lead to ineffectiveness.

"People should know — this is what this means," Eileen said.

What employers have to say

From a business perspective, companies that employ teenagers seem to be satisfied with the bill in its amended form.

"We were concerned about a four-hour limit per day. The supermarket industry operates 60 percent by part-time work force... Five hours is a little easier," said Brian Houghton, vice president of the Massachusetts Food Association. "The amended version is certainly viewed more favorably by (the association's) members."

"I try to keep in touch with the parents. The employee's first priority is school and I ask parents to let me know when their kids are slacking off."

LARRY FLYNN, OWNER OF FLYNN'S GROCERY AND DELI IN SCITUATE

He said, in any case, that the law as it stands allowing 16 - and 17-year-old employees to work 48 hours a week when school is in session is "antiquated" and calls for some sort of change.

"We all agreed something had to be done," he said.

But Houghton said one potential problem with the bill is the actual hours. Currently and under the bill, 16- and 17-year-old employees are allowed to work between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m. on nights followed by a school day.

"Part of the problem is that supermarkets do a lot of stocking in the evening to get ready for the next day," said Houghton, pointing to restaurants and racetracks that are allowed to schedule that age bracket until midnight.

Joseph Spinale, who manages Burger King in Kingston, thinks the teen work bill is a good idea.

"I think these are very fair guidelines. Kids shouldn't work 40 hours a week anyway. For even the few individuals who really need to work more, 32 hours is certainly manageable," he said.

Through scheduling, Spinale said he already complies with the proposed law. "Most of the teenagers who work for me work less than the maximum the proposed law allows. Usually no one works more than a couple of nights a week from 5 to 8 or 9 p.m.," he said.

Spinale, a Duxbury resident, has three children of his own employed by Burger King — Susan, 18, is an employee; Joseph, 19, is an hourly manager; and Norma, 21, is an assistant manager.

"With all of my kids, the hours they work had a lot to do with their report cards. As long as they were making the grade, if they wanted to work three or four nights a week, I'd allow them to," he said.

Out of all his children, Joseph was the only one who sometimes exceeded a 32-hour work week while in school. But Spinale points out that was through Duxbury High School's work-study program.

"I try to keep in touch with the parents. The employee's first priority is school and I ask parents to let me know when their kids are slacking off," he said.

Larry Flynn, who owns Flynn's Grocery and Deli in Scituate and Flynn's Quick Pick in Norwell, says the legislation as it stand would not affect his business. He says he does not currently employ anyone under the age of 16 and the teenagers he employs work no more than four hours a day or more than 21 hours a week.

Making the grade

On the school side, Marshfield High School teacher Maryann Cohan applauds the bill as a much-needed measure.

"I think it's a good idea to reduce the number of hours teenagers can work. I've seen it as a problem for certain teenagers. They confuse their priorities," said Cohan, who said she will not allow her children, now 2 and 9, to work while in school. "As the hours go up, school work really takes a back seat," said Donna Brown, a guidance counselor at Silver Lake Regional High School. John McEwan, principal of Silver Lake Regional High School, said the teen work bill is a great idea.

"It's one of the best things you could do for education. The trouble is the ones who really work the most are the ones who can afford to work the least (academically)," he said.

Brown says academics aren't the only things that suffer.

"Work is fine. Some students work like little Trojans over the weekend... But for the ones that work two or three days during the school week, that's the end of extra help, of programs at the library, bands and sports," she said.

Cohan, a Scituate resident, points out that not all students who work a great deal are necessarily "problem students."

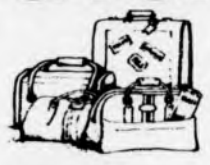
"Some are either trying to help out their family, save money for things they want, or get experience in a field. That's valid," she said. "As much as I hate to say it, some 16-and 17-year-olds actually do have to support themselves right down to having a place to live. It happens."

Joseph O'Neil, guidance director at Duxbury High School, sees things in a similar light.

"I'm not talking about a car or spring break. I'm talking about clothes and books," said O'Neil, who worked in high school and whose children worked between 20 and 24 hours while in high school.

But Brown says, more often than not, students — when pressed — tell her they're working to pay for a car or car insurance. "Unfortunately, some kids need to work. But not a lot," she said. Gail Roycroft, head guidance counselor at Marshfield High School also points out that it's more difficult for a student to work in the wake of Education Reform of 1993's time and learning requirements that have eliminated study halls.

"Coming home after work at 10 p.m. to do homework... if you have to do so much within certain time frames, it can get a bit crazy," she said.

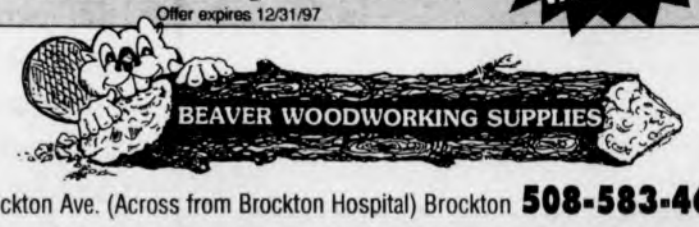


About 10 years ago, Laurence Steinberg of the University of Wisconsin — now at Temple University — and Ellen Greenberg of the University of California studied the effects of work on high school students. In the September 1986 publication of The Harvard Education Letter, they concluded that if work consumes more than 14 hours a week for sophomores and more than 19 hours a week for seniors, grades fall dramatically.

New Bedford Rep. Koczera said the bill also works to involve more people when it comes to looking out for a student's well-being.

"You need to include employers and educators with the parents to oversee what's in the best interest of the student," he said.

The bill includes streamlining the permitting process for working teenagers age 14 through 17. That process is centralized at the schools.



"It's recognizing the role of the parent, the obligation of the employer and the responsibility that is going to school officials to know what's going on with the student in the classroom. If a kid is falling asleep in class, it's the responsibility of the officials to know what activities the young adults are engaged in," he said.

Greenbush plans still floated

MBTA says water concerns irrelevant

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

A press spokesman for the MBTA confirmed Wednesday the transit authority is moving ahead with the Greenbush line, despite recent news a section of their track in Cohasset might end up under water.

The new information, which the town's engineer Domenic Tutela developed, indicated that the federal emergency management agency's maps (which the T has been using as one basis for its design plans) grossly underestimated the high water levels around Sohier Street.

Specifically, in a storm of strength comparable to those that have buffeted Cohasset during three of the past four years, the Greenbush tracks along Sohier Street would be submerged.

Tutela confirmed Wednesday the T was dealing with the new data somewhat skeptically which was also "about as we expected." Last week, for instance, when the town's mitigation board met with T environmental project manager Andrew Brennan, the T's key man was quizzed about his readiness to accept damage to trains and MBTA infrastructure.

> "I don't think the T has done its homework."
> —PETER PRATT.

While Brennan stopped short of dismissing Tutela's findings, he appeared to indicate he was still relying on studies compiled by T engineers Sverdrup Civil, Inc. Sverdrup has not yet allowed the Greenbush line would definitely impact the flood control problem, and Tutela said as of Wednesday the T still maintained the impact had not been proven.

Moreover, Brian Pedro for the T said the transit authority is on schedule with its environmental impact study, though he acknowledged parts of the design could change after the Army Corps of Engineers completes its review. The Greenbush line is the last spur of a three-tiered plan to restore commuter rail service to the South Shore. Earlier this fall, the Plymouth and Middleboro lines were opened.

Meantime, engineers for the T and the town of Cohasset continued to hash over technical details, with an eye to synchronizing separate state and local construction projects.

The engineer said he believed the transit authority would be cooperative with town officials as long as the town had the facts and could prove its points. Also Wednesday, Tutela said, the transit authority's engineers attended another working session on the James Brook flood issue and this time, they presented a counter proposal to deal with the upper part of the watershed.

Both sides met for a second time Wednesday after the Mariner went to press to go over the timing on the T's plan to bring back the Greenbush train and the town's James Brook flood control project.

Yet, though the dialogue is ongoing, some members of the Greenbush mitigation board appeared earlier this week to be divided over questions about the T's intentions in Cohasset. Both Thomas Gruber and Michael Dick agreed the situation has undoubtedly changed since Tutela completed an hydraulic study of the James Brook watershed.

But while Gruber said the T may just be slow to digest new information about the flood plain where the transit authority plans to build a section of track, Dick said the important questions are far more serious.

According to Dick, who is the Conservation Commission's appointed representative to the mitigation board, the Greenbush restoration could ultimately prevent Cohasset from dealing with its flood control problems in the James Brook watershed.

"Their project has great potential for preventing the town from completing the flood impact mitigation it needs to do," said Dick who added he will be studying the results of the Wednesday meeting for signs the T is willing to cooperate and act in the town's best interests.

In contrast, Gruber took a more optimistic view than his colleague and held out hope that the T might eventually become Cohasset's partner in the flood mitigation project.

Gruber said it was understandable the T would be slow to commit funds to the flood mitigation effort until it had been proven the train made the flooding worse than it was before.

But Gruber said the T was faced with but three realistic choices, due to the Tutela findings and could either work with Cohasset on the flood project, raise the rail bed or change the design criteria, risking damage in a flood.

Their best alternative, Gruber reasoned, would be to become a partner in the flood project.

Finally, former selectman Peter Pratt, who wrote the grant proposal for the James Brook flood control project, said Brennan missed the point when he said the T might tolerate some flooding in their infrastructure.

"I don't think the T has done its homework," Pratt said.

Pratt also said though the T might initially try to downplay Tutela's work on the water levels in the flood plain, ultimately the information would be a factor.

"The FEMA maps are not all that accurate," Pratt said. "But that was clearly something the T had not figured out."

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Fire department overtime continues to surge

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The fire department spent $15,475.13 in overtime in November, according to Fire Chief Roger Lincoln's Dec. 2 overtime report.

The figure includes: $4,655.56 in call backs, $7,840.63 in sick leave; $1,392.08 in training; $424.15 to call back a fire-fighter mechanic; and $1,162.71 for administrative leave to cover the captain's shift while he served as acting chief while Lincoln was on vacation.

Lincoln explained training overtime costs were incurred when the department's two new fire-fighters had to be accompanied for safety reasons by two experienced fire-fighters to the Barnstable Fire Training Academy where the fire-fighters trained in "live fire" conditions.

Two veteran fire-fighters also recently had surgery and are on extended sick leave. Other fire-fighters are called in to cover those shifts, accounting for the high amount of overtime attributed to sick leave.

Call-backs occur whenever the ambulance leaves town, Lincoln said.

"When the ambulance makes a transport to the hospital we lose 50 percent of our on-duty manpower," he said. That means only two men are left in town to cover any other incident so other off-duty fire-fighters are called back to cover which increases the amount of overtime used.

Lincoln explained the "mechanic" overtime amount was due to the fire-fighter mechanic being called back to fix a mechanical problem when he was not scheduled to work .

The town appropriated $120,182 for fire department overtime for fiscal year 1998 which began July 1.

As of Dec. 1, there was $34,498.74 remaining in the account.

"We're in pretty rough shape," Lincoln said about the depletion in the overtime account. "I plan to go back to see if we can get more money to see us through the end of the year."

Lincoln explained that a unique set of circumstances have made this year's high overtime usage unusual.

The town hired two new fire-fighters to replace two who retired. But the bureaucratic red tape at the state level extended the time it took to bring the new firefighters on line. That coupled with two veteran fire-fighters needing surgery has exacerbated the overtime situation, Lincoln said.

He said it costs $1,000 a week to cover a vacancy in the department.

"Now that two men are on extended leave, we lost everything we gained by putting the new men on shift," he said.

Last month selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to track fire department overtime on a weekly basis because they were alarmed at the rate it was being used.

This week, Selectman Merle Brown said overtime money "is flowing like water."

Haddad said two fire-fighters out on long-term sick leave is a circumstance that is "out of our control."

Nevertheless Haddad said the fire department overtime budget would need an infusion of $40,000 to $50,000 before the close of the fiscal year.

Cohasset resident and former NY Yankee, Kenny Greer, is one of the head coaches at the Bases-Loaded Training Center in Hingham.

about Kenny Greer and his baseball prowess, if not, let us fill you in! Ken went to Hull High School and went on to attend UMass/Amherst where he was drafted by the New York Yankees in the 10th round of the 1988 baseball draft. He then went on to play for 10 years with the Yankees, Mets, Giants, Pirates and Orioles. Kenny spent parts of two seasons in the major leagues with the Mets and the Giants. Now Ken looks to extend his baseball career through coaching. He teams up with his brother Kevin of Weymouth and Danny McHugh of Hingham to bring baseball back to the South Shore. Kenny, Kevin and Danny head the coaching staff at Bases-Loaded Training Center, located in Hingham in the South Shore Sports Center (55 Recreation Park Dr.). Ken lives in Cohasset with his wife Abby (Adams), and we wish him all the best in his latest venture — with his knowledge and abilities, we know he has a winning team!

SPENT TERM ABROAD

Kendra D. Gray, the daughter of G.A. David and Katherine R. Gray of Nichols Road and a CHS grad (Class of '95), is currently spending a term abroad from her studies at Union College in Schenectady, N.Y., where she is a junior majoring in economics. Currently, she is attending the American University in Bulgaria in the town of Blagoevgrad, located 60 miles southwest of Sofia, the capital city. Founded in 1991, the AUBG attracts 700 students primarily from southeast Europe including Bulgaria, Romania, Albania, Georgia, Moldova and Macedonia. Classes are given in English by a faculty that is two-thirds American. While in Europe, Kendra has found the time to visit the Black Sea, Athens and the Greek Islands, and parts of western Turkey including Istanbul. MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

'Tis the season to be jolly . . . and to bake! Years ago (when it seemed that everyone had more time), Ann Pompeo always had a cookie swap party — everyone brought a dish of their favorite recipe, along with instructions for making them; then you took your plate home filled with everyone else's cookies. It was always lots of fun, and a delicious way to get new recipes!

This recipe is a real "keeper," and the kiddos will love to help you make these. Gail Huston gave this "way back then," and everyone still asks for them — they are lovely decorated for Christmas.

Gail's Favorite Molasses Cookies

1 cup shortening
1 cup sugar
1 cup molasses
1 egg
4 teaspoons soda
2/3 cup hot water
1 tablespoon vanilla
5 cups all purpose flour
1-1/2 teaspoons cream of tartar
1-1/2 teaspoons ginger
1-1/2 teaspoons cinnamon
1/2 teaspoon cloves
3/4 teaspoon salt

Preheat oven to 400 degrees.

Melt shortening, add sugar and mix. Add molasses and beaten egg. Dissolve soda in hot water and add with vanilla. Sift and mix together the flour, cream of tartar, spices and salt. Add to cookie mixture and mix thoroughly. Chill dough one hour or overnight in refrigerator. Roll 1/4" thick and cut with cookie cutters. Bake about six to eight minutes.

Yields: five dozen cookies.

Frosting for these cookies is a basic one, very light and airy rather than creamy. It is a firm frosting that holds up well.

Royal Icing

2 egg whites (1/4 cup)
3 cups confectioners sugar
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1/4 teaspoon salt

Combine the egg whites, sugar, lemon juice and salt in a mixing bowl. Beat at high speed for several minutes, until the mixture holds soft peaks.

A great way to fly

I'm a convert.

If I have anything to say about it — Logan Airport and my car have forever parted company.

With two boys returning to college (one via car, one by plane) after the Thanksgiving weekend, we were organized at my house for a change.

So with a little extra time to spare and warnings that the airport was a mob scene, my younger son and I decided to test Harbor Express — the airport water shuttle that departs from the Quincy shipyard.

We called first to check the schedule which is hourly on weekends (it runs about every half hour during the week).

Parking just off the rotary at the foot of the Fore River Bridge is a snap. The boat terminal is warm and comfortable and includes restrooms. I bought a "companion fare" ticket at $10 (1/2 the round-trip price) so I could figure out how to get back.

The 25-minute catamaran trip was like floating on air. There are seats and tables, plenty of room for luggage and a snack bar. While skimming along the water, we enjoyed spectacular views the Boston skyline and harbor front. (That surely beats "white-knuckling it" while driving on the Southeast Expressway).

Shuttle buses awaited our arrival at the dock and took us directly to the our airline terminal.

Coming back, the buses with "water shuttle" clearly spelled out on their sides, run every ten minutes. The waiting area is the same as for the other airport shuttle buses, so it is not difficult to find the bus stop because there's always a crowd there. The bus took me back to the dock which is equipped with an enclosed, heated pavilion.

The catamaran trip back includes a brief stop at Long Wharf in Boston where we picked up more riders. Then it was back to Quincy.

Daily parking is free at Harbor Express.

We have frequented the Braintree Logan Express bus shuttle a lot as an alternative to driving to the airport. To me the trip down 3A to the Quincy shipyard is far more pleasant than tackling the nightmarish South Shore Plaza exit off 128 to get to the Braintree Logan Express which is located behind the Sheraton Tara.

I believe in sharing good news and spreading the word.

So when an ashen faced co-worker came in yesterday morning after barely surviving driving her husband to the airport, I gave her my Harbor Express schedule and a pep talk about the service.

The only drawback I can see with the airport shuttle is that not enough people are taking advantage of it. There were plenty of empty seats on board.

By the way, you can also get to the airport via Hingham commuter boats which take you to Rowes Wharf. From there the water taxi shuttles you to the same airport dock that Harbor Express uses.

So next time you and a plane have a rendezvous, try going by boat.

You'll like flying a lot better because you'll be relaxed when you get to the airport.

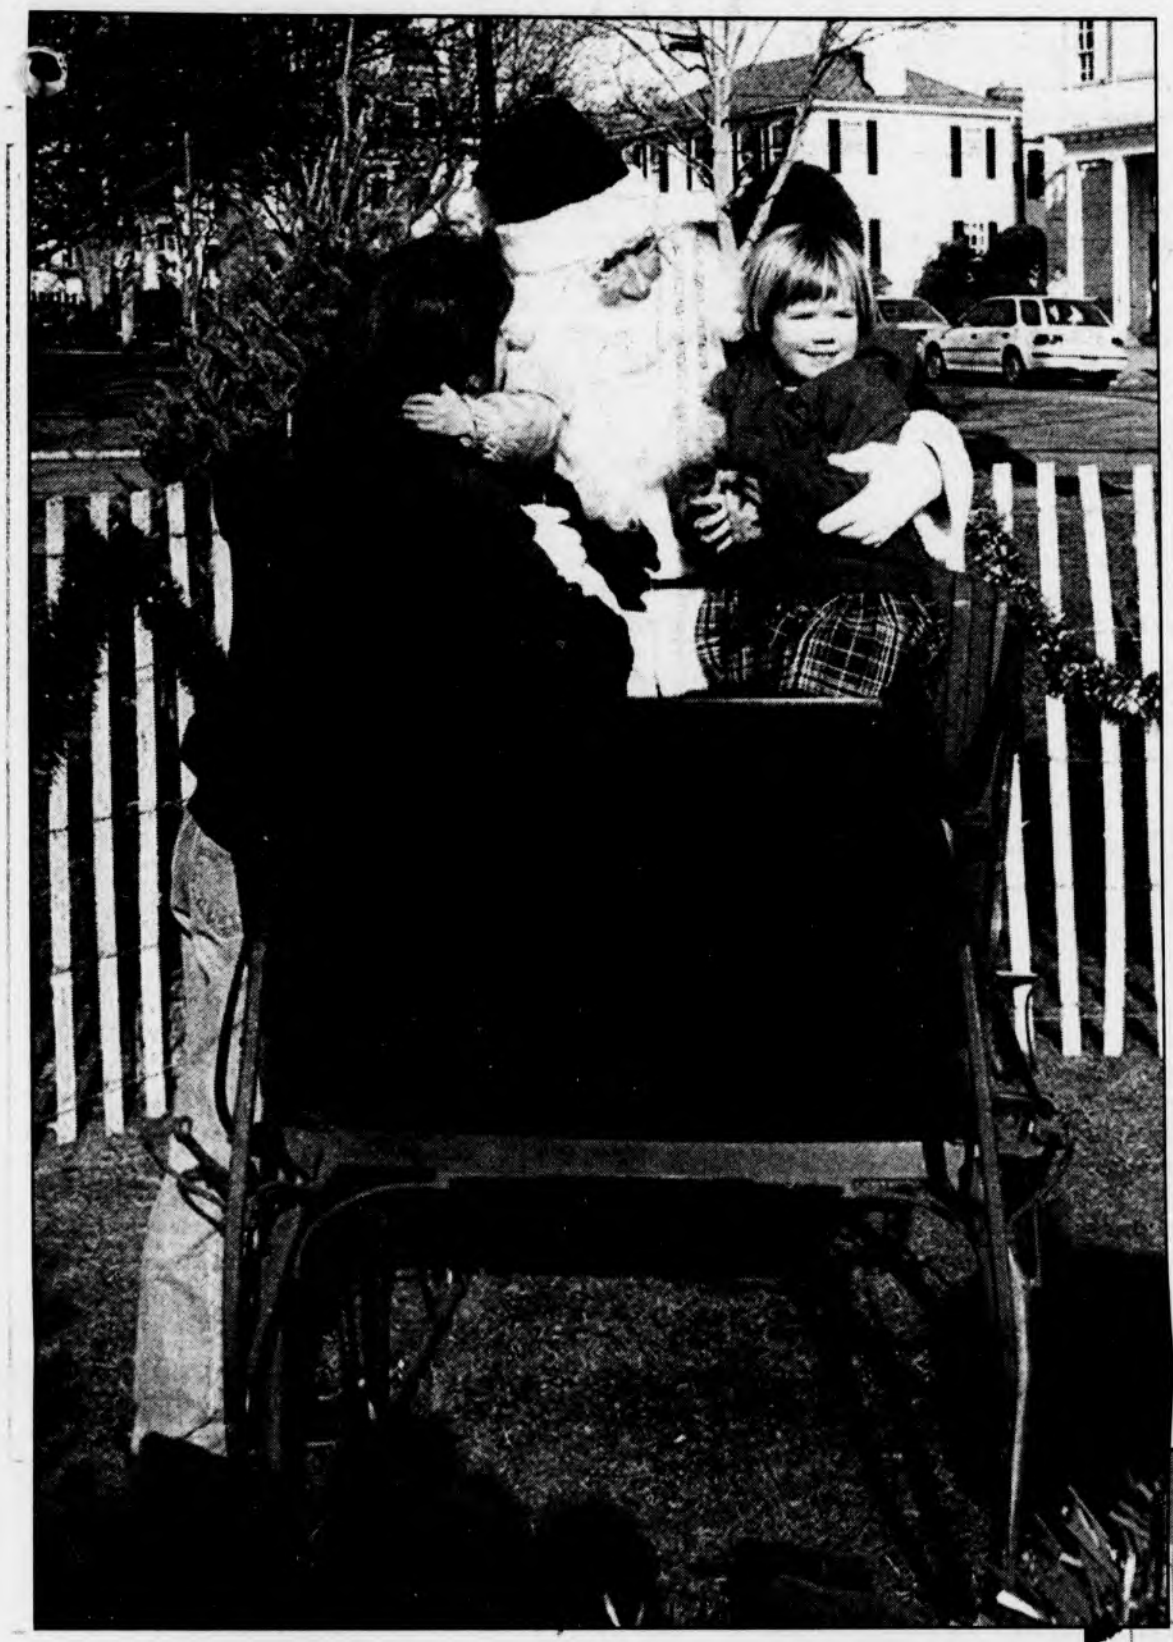
Social awareness group praised



To the Editor:

I'm writing to recognize and thank the Cohasset High School Social Awareness Group for their work at the Mary Martha Learning Center, a residence and educational center in Hingham for homeless women and their children. Earlier this month, on a cold damp Saturday, 11 members of the group spent the morning cleaning up the yard and painting an inside hallway. The enthusiasm and energy displayed by each person was terrific! Hats off to the following students: Elizabeth Ingber, Jessie Zerendow, Maggie O'Connor, Rob Buckley, Grace Gardner, Whitney Cook, Josh Flanagan, Megan Conley, Agnes Dailly (an AFS student from France), Jen Chastain and Megan Connolly.

Spotlight on the Lobster Lab

To the Editor:

For whatever reason The Boston Globe has taken an interest in who and what is behind the opposition to the Lobster Lab, a little more scrutiny and exposure won't be amiss.

The usual naysayers whose hobby seems to be jumping up at town meetings with absurd amendments or quibbles, probably don't have much effect, being well-known and largely discounted. (Maybe they shouldn't be discounted; two are now on the Advisory Committee). A few voters are hung up on a mantra that "we didn't buy the property for that purpose, so I can't stretch my mind to consider the benefits of the proposed lab to students of the future." Well, maybe it's a good thing everyone isn't blessed with soaring imagination; we need a few with their feet firmly planted in the mud and their eyes on their feet, to keep us from overbuilding, upping the tax rate, or indulging in cultural activity that might interfere with boat-trailer parking.

But what's really behind the determined animosity of some selectmen? Why, when the Lightkeepers met with the selectmen a year ago to discuss the lab, did Michael Sullivan launch into wild diatribe about the temerity of the Lightkeepers in taking on such a project? Who fed him the distorted "information" about the operating costs and expenses for Bancroft Hall? Why did Nan Roth create a blizzard of questions, the answers to which were self-evident in the material previously provided? Why the statement that "the lab is a good idea, but it should be done by a new organization rather than the Lightkeepers?" (Why oppose a seasoned group with a track record and existing legal non-profit status, when such qualities are very important in approaching foundations and other large donors?)

Why are the Selectmen implying that the operating expenses will be difficult to recover from foundations and other sources, but requiring the lab to share its revenues with the town? Even in the remote chance that the lab turns up something patentable and of value, it's not likely that the revenue would make much of a dent in operating expenses. Seems as if somebody has got some principle in mind that hasn't been tempered with common sense. The town should confine itself to being the lessor, and not attempt to be a partner in the enterprise.

Why is the new Request for Proposals far more demanding than the previous one? (Even that was more demanding than RFP's issued by the town in response to previous good intentions by citizen groups). One can argue that it's because we now have a town manager and are more business-like, but we need be sure that "being business-like" isn't misused to serve the private agendas of selectmen etc. Let's keep our priorities straight. It's more important to encourage good works by our volunteers than to smother them with bureaucratic pettifoggery.

Good citizens shouldn't leave it to reporters to ask all the questions: there's plenty to go around.

Getting back to spiritual basics

The Task Force on Spirituality and Healing of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset has scheduled their third workshop for the general public under the heading of "Pathways to Healing III." At their most recent gathering (Jan. 22), "Pathways to Healing II," Dr. Bruce Indek, a local chiropractor, presented a talk on "Universal Innate Healing Energies," helping us understand some of the basic interconnections involved in natural and spiritual healing practices. Then, Charles Mangat-Ray ("Raj"), a local, retired yoga master, led through four specific yoga breathing techniques aimed at benefits in circulation, diet control and energy.

On Wednesday, Feb. 26, at 7:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church (next to Cohasset Town Hall), the task force has invited John Loupos (of Jade Forest on Route 3A) to present his thoughts on the connection between the practice of Tai Chi and wellness. He will then spend the rest of the workshop introducing some of the attitudes and movements of Tai Chi.

Future workshops will feature area physical therapist and Reiki master Marcia Hood (March 19, 7:30 p.m.), author and artist Joan Drescher (April 9, 7:30 p.m.) who will share art as healing therapy; and a Healing Fair with four to six practitioners conducting simultaneous 30-minute demonstrations, is tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, May 21, from 7 to 9:30 p.m. A 10-week course entitled "Eight Weeks to Wellness," based on Dr. Andrew Weil's book, "Spontaneous Healing," is planned for late April through June. The events are free and open to the public. Call 383-0345 for directions or further information.

Breakfast forum on employer health issues

How do Massachusetts employers rate the value and performance of — and their satisfaction with — various employee health plans?

Find out when the South Shore Business Partnership for Health hosts its next breakfast forum Friday, Dec. 12, from 7:30 to 9 a.m. in South Shore Hospital's Emerson conference room. The forum is free, but seating is limited; call (781) 340-8564 to register.

At the forum, Paula Bresler, executive director of the Massachusetts Healthcare Purchaser Group, will present the results of a comprehensive employer survey on the performance of for-profit and not-for-profit health plans operating in Massachusetts.

In addition, Jim Klocke of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce will discuss a report examining the criteria Boston-area businesses use when selecting and evaluating the performance of employee health plans.

The South Shore Business Partnership for Health was formed to help regional businesses address their pressing health care concerns through educational forums and networking opportunities. Forums are presented in conjunction with South Shore Hospital and the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

The Memory Tree at the South Shore Community Center

Each week the Cohasset Mariner will run a list of contributors to the Memory Tree.

This holiday season will be enriched by remembering, in a tangible way, the joy our loved ones have shared with us in seasons past.

Commemorative lights will shine on The Memory Tree on the lawn of the South Shore Community Center. As contributions are received, bulbs will be illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered will be published in the Cohasset Mariner. Your tax deductible contribution will help continue quality programs at SSCC.

The star atop the 1997 Memory Tree will shine in honor of our departed loved ones whom you wish to honor. Participation options are: Individual: Forget-me-not white lights for a gift of $5; Angel: Individuals, businesses, or professionals giving $15 or more, forget-me-not-white lights; Archangel: Individuals, businesses, professionals giving $50 or more, forget-me-not white lights.

Generosity will be acknowledged by white lights on the Memory Tree, and on the scroll published weekly.

Please make checks payable to South Shore Community Center, P.O. Box 631-3, North Main St., Cohasset 02025.

There are now more than 60 lights shining on our Memory Tree. We have room for lots more. We will be adding lights to the tree each week through the month of December.

Alzheimer's support group to meet

The Alzheimer's Disease Support Group of the South Shore will present a program Wednesday, Dec. 17, 7:30 p.m. at the Thaxter Community Hall, 30 Thaxter St. in Hingham, on Medicaid and long-term care. David Porter of the Southeastern Office of the Massachusetts Division of Medical Assistance will explain recent changes in Medicaid law, how application is made for financial assistance for nursing home care and how to qualify for assistance The Southeastern office in Taunton processes all Medicaid applications on the South Shore.

This is an excellent opportunity to learn the basics regarding Medicaid applications. Even if a family is not contemplating nursing home care for their patient, it is never too early to learn your options for planning for the future if nursing home care becomes necessary.

This meeting is free and open to the public. Please call (781) 749-5417 for more information.

Homeowners outraged over septic district

The experimental districts are widely perceived as a perpetual cycle of onerous Title 5 inspections and have even been ridiculed as ithe sewer police."Though started about 20 years ago to deal with failing septic systems and cesspools, the district concept never really caught on with the public and has only recently won the cautious backing of some inside the state environmental protection agency.

In Cohasset, two districts are soon to be implemented by the health board, following a settlement negotiated by the sewer commission which was under pressure from the state, Guild said. (After nearly 20 years of fighting with the Attorney General's office over Cohasset's minor wastewater permit violations, the sewer commission earlier this year inked a deal and settled a consent judgment. It originally called for sewers to be laid throughout the town.)

Though the state initially had pushed for a town-wide sewer system in Cohasset, numerous town meetings voted it down.

Ironically, the return to the sewer question moved the board back to the starting point ó back to dealing with the scenario it had previously been instructed to avoid. Though the state initially had pushed for a town-wide sewer system in Cohasset, numerous town meetings voted it down. Ultimately, the sewer commission and the state arrived at the compromise solution of naming the two wastewater districts in a portion of the area that was not to be sewered. Specifically, the two districts were formed to allow the health board to inspect and monitor septic systems in parts of town deemed environmentally sensitive, such as Lily Pond which is the source of the public water supply.

Tuesday, the commissioner repeated his earlier opinion that the settlement was good overall for the town, though it did place a burden on a small number of households.

But Guild was shouted down by residents, as opposition continued to mount to the settlement, which previously caused an uproar when it was announced to residents at a health board meeting last month.

As they vowed at the previous health board forum, a citizens group has formed and hired a lawyer, Stephen Marcus, to challenge the sewer commission and the authorities who are forcing the districts on the homeowners.

If necessary, Marcus said, the question will go back before a special town meeting. Moreover, the citizens group demanded they be allowed to connect to the sewer system, rather than be forced into the septic district.

Though more than half of citizens group left the auditorium before the meeting was adjourned, slamming doors and sometimes heaping verbal abuse on the sewer board., their plight seemed to soften the sewer boardís earlier position. Also, the commissioner seemed to back off earlier statements that sewers were not a viable option in two areas slated to become on-site wastewater management districts.

As engineer Daniel Coughlin of Tutela Engineering Associates put it, "Sewers are always an option."

Nonetheless, Guild stopped short of saying he would favor extending sewer lines to the sensitive Lily Pond area or to the other planned district, dubbed the Triangle, at the intersections of Nichols and Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue. Moreover, he reiterated his earlier statements that the decision to build more sewer mains would ultimately depend on the question of the plantís capacity as well as cost.

Guild has previously said it would be very expensive to lay sewer mains in the areas where ledge is a factor.

The statements from Guild and Coughlin came near the close of a 2 1/2 hour session which at times resembled a shouting match.

Public input sought on superintendent search

School committee members agree that conducting public forums to brainstorm on what they should be looking for in a new superintendent is a good idea.

"We're in the process of hiring a CEO for 1/2 the town," committee member Ralph Kidder said. "(The superintendent) has over 100 employess and three levels of customers — students, parents and the community at large. And the school department commands 1/2 the town's resources.

"While as the board of directors, we make the final decision. It seems to me the shareholders ought to have some say," Kidder said.

After considerable discussion last week, the committee agreed that the forums should be conducted early in the process but they haven't determined if they should be inclusive or held separately for students, teachers and the community at large.

They will decide at their Dec. 18 meeting how to proceed and if hiring a consultant is necessary.

Ray Kasperowicz of South Main Street urged the school committee just to get on with it.

"There is no need to mystify the process," he said.

Village Fair kicks off the holiday season

the jumble sale consisting of merchandise gathered from the parishioners, which consisted largely of books arranged by interest, and crafts. There was also the ever-popular Secret Room where children could go to purchase inexpensive gifts from 50 cents to $1 for every member of their family. The policy was "no parents allowed," however, there were teenagers to assist the excited shoppers, and all proceeds went to the benefit of the Appalachian Service Project (ASP).

Santa Claus could be found in his sleigh about 50 yards from the duck pond with a line of youngsters waiting to climb upon his lap to assure him that they had been very nice and not naughty over the course of the last year. Some came equipped with a list of presents they were hoping to receive and they were assured that he would have his elves, who were already working overtime back at the North Pole, get on it right away. He said he had a smooth trip from his toy workshop and that he was looking forward to taking a long break after the holiday season and maybe heading out to the Florida Keys. His reindeer, after drinking thirstily from the duck pond, had wandered to the back of the town hall where they spent the rest of their time grazing.

The proceeds from the sale of the pictures taken with Santa will go to Cohasset's part in the ASP, which sends as many as 80 local teens and adults to Appalachia each year to work on homes for the needy.

By Santa's side was Janet Hoyler playing a series of trumpet solos including "Jingle Bells," "O' Holy Night," "O' Come, All Ye Faithful" and "Silent Night."

The First Unitarian Church Parish House had its annual jumble sale and Swedish coffee shop, which supplied more than 600 cinnamon buns to hungry townspeople. Pre-ordered Christmas trees that had been freshly cut were supplied by The Carver Family Tree Farm in Montpelier, Vt.

Outside St. Stephen's Church, Habitat for Humanity volunteers were holding a fund-raiser for a home being built in Quincy. All proceeds will be used in the construction of the home. By 1 p.m., they had raised more than $400.

Besides the crafts sale, the highlight at the Second Congregational Church was the annual "Chowdah Bar." Tasty, hot New England clam chowder could be purchased for $2.50 a bowl or $7 a quart. John Campbell said they started with 50 gallons and it looked like it would be all gone by 3 p.m. The largest sale of the day was a hungry customer who purchased two gallons.

A good time was had by all in attendance on the crisp, late fall day and there are already plans in the works for next year's fair.

By the end of the day, Santa had some trouble prying himself out of his sled and his lap was obviously quite sore, but after harnessing up his reindeer before taking off, he was heard saying "Merry Christmas to all and to all a good night!"

Derek Ingemi and his family are going to be the recipients of a house in Quincy built by Habitat for Humanity. Here townspeople donate money and sign 2x4s to be used in the construction. With Ingemi behind the counter are Ann Whealer and David Bigley.

Anti-landfill group tries to keep town SAFE

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

John McNabb, who is a member of SAFE, worries about possible landfill seepage into Lily Pond.

What is the greatest threat to Cohasset's water drinking supply in Lily Pond? Acid rain? E. coli bacteria? According to members of the anti-landfill group, Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), it is the Cohasset Heights Landfill.

SAFE exists for the sole purpose of bringing the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill to a grinding halt. SAFE members cite dozens of documented violations committed by CHL, from wetlands contamination to illegal dumping in unpermitted areas, as evidence that the landfill is a health threat to residents.

But what are the roots of SAFE and who are its members?

The group has grown from a core membership of 10 to 12 people to a list of 700 to 800 people who have donated money to the group, sent letters to DEP or publicly opposed CHL in some way.

The roots of SAFE extend back to the late 1980s and a precursor group called Concerned Citizens for Cohasset.

Prior to winning election to the health board, Alix White was a founding member of SAFE. White was also a member of Concerned Citizens for Cohasset.

As White recalls, Concerned Citizens formed out of concern for some of the activities of CHL and its proposal to expand Area V of the landfill. Concerned Citizens successfully lobbied the state to require CHL to perform an Environmental Notification Form (ENF) detailing the scope of the project and preliminary information about potential environmental impacts.

Eventually, the state required CHL to perform a full Environmental Impact Report (EIR) to provide detailed information about the environmental impact of the landfill and the proposed expansion.

White and other concerned citizens believed the expansion would be detrimental to the health of residents. CHL sits upland from Lily Pond well within the watershed for the town's water supply. Any rainwater that runs down the landfill has the potential to carry contaminants from CHL to Lily Pond.

But CHL has maintained that the expansion would not pose any adverse effects to the environment. CHL has also produced several expert witnesses to support its position.

Members of Concerned Citizens believed that CHL's record of violations proved that it didn't care about any alleged adverse effects from the landfill. The only viable option seemed to be preventing CHL from expanding, and monitoring its actions to find future violations.

Former selectman Martha Gjestsby asked McNabb to attend a meeting of Concerned Citizens in the high school as a professional advisor. McNabb had worked at the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) from 1983 to 1989 as a legislative liaison for the commissioner's office.

"I was a lobbyist for the DEP, working on legislation related to solid waste, water supplies, wetlands and other environmental issues," McNabb said. "Martha asked me to come to a meeting and help people write comments for the EIR."

McNabb said at that time he was new to the whole battle against CHL. It soon became obvious to members at the meeting that a group was needed to monitor CHL.

Group members also believed they needed a more organized front to prevent CHL from expanding. In 1991, SAFE was formed with 10 or 12 members.

Some of the founding members of SAFE included former selectmen Peter Pratt and Gjestsby, White, attorney Kevin O' Donnell and McNabb.

O'Donnell joined the group in 1991 after he received a flier inquiring about a bad smell around town. The flier implied that CHL was the source of the smell, and asked residents to attend an informational meeting.

O'Donnell had noticed a foul smell near Route 3A, and decided to attend the meeting.

The fliers came from White who passed out the informational sheets on an egg delivery route she ran in town.

He was shocked to learn that the smell came from the landfill, and even more shocked to find out there was a landfill off Route 3A at all.

Around the time O'Donnell moved to Cohasset in the 1970's the press grabbed hold of a story about an entire New York community built on top of a toxic waste site. The community was Love Canal and O'Donnell wanted to make sure he moved his wife and four children to an environmentally safe town.

After some research, O'Donnell chose Cohasset. Ironically, O'Donnell lives less than a mile from CHL. "I was so disappointed to find out about the landfill," O

Donnell said. "I was amazed it was even there because no one ever mentioned it."

O' Donnell joined what would become SAFE, and lent his 11 years of legal expertise as an attorney to the group. Now O'Donnell lobbies hard to expose violations at CHL and to shut down the landfill.

Acting as an attorney for SAFE supporting the town, O'Donnell has invested thousands of hours in an attempt to close down CHL. It's a fight he feels is well worth the cost in time even though he receives no payment for legal services.

Along with McNabb, O'Donnell is currently one of the two most active members in the group.

"What really hooked me was that one night CHL was defending itself at town hall and they brought in an odor expert who said what we smelled was not from the dump but from a restaurant with bad drainage pipes," O'Donnell said. "They had this expert telling us this, and I just knew he was lying." All the members of SAFE seem to agree on one thing, CHL is bad for the health of residents.

It has been a long and difficult route for the group. McNabb said it has been a real struggle trying to keep people interested through the EIR process, site assignment hearings and other efforts by CHL to expand both services and its size.

In 1991, SAFE faced its first big challenge when Barry tried to use the landfill to accept sludge from the state. The group won that battle.

Then SAFE fought the Area V expansion, forcing several revisions of the EIR. And while MEPA eventually approved the EIR, the health board ultimately rejected the expansion.

O'Donnell said he is disappointed that the state has not responded more aggressively to CHL's violations. In 1995, MEPA approved CHL's EIR for the Area V expansion just three days before the state imposed an indefinite moratorium on landfilling in Massachusetts.

And McNabb is disappointed that the health board has not signed off on a closure agreement for CHL to pay $14 million to close the landfill when it reaches maximum capacity.

The group has grown from a core membership of 10 to 12 people to a list of 700 to 800 people who have donated money to the group, sent letters to DEP or publicly opposed CHL in some way.

Despite these disagreements, some public officials agree that without SAFE, many of CHL's violations never would have been discovered.

"I think they're doing a great job," White said.

White resigned as president of SAFE in 1993 when she was elected to the health board to prevent any conflict of interest.

More recently, SAFE has participated in court hearings on CHL's Superior Court appeal of the health board's decision. SAFE is also fighting the proposed vertical expansion by CHL to raise the maximum height of the landfill from 190 feet to 205 or 210 feet.

Last month, McNabb discovered that CHL illegally dumped refuse in an unpermitted area beginning in 1988. According to McNabb, Barry showed up at a health board meeting and admitted he had filled in Area IV-B.

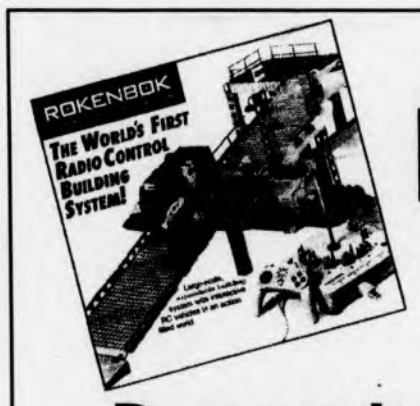
And CHL attorney Anton Moehrke said in a previous conversation with the Mariner that any dumping in Area IV-B was unintentional.

"Clean water is the bottom line," McNabb said. "CHL is one-mile uphill from Lily Pond and it has been proven that the landfill has damaged wetlands and contaminated both surface and ground water. We've never found any contamination in Lily Pond, but the longer it's there the greater the chance of contamination."

Moehrke has maintained on several past occasions that the company will respond to any environmental problems at the landfill quickly and in accordance with all laws.

And to its credit, CHL has cleaned up wetlands and other areas after violations and other problems have been discovered.

But O'Donnell and other members of SAFE agree that the best thing for the health and safety of the town would be for CHL to close down.



"We want Paul Barry to remove the illegal dumping from Area IV-B," O'Donnell said. "And we want to shut him down because of the numerous violations and improper operation. At the site assignment hearings we documented how dangerous he runs this facility and his disregard for the citizens of Cohasset."

Whether SAFE actually succeeds in convincing the town to shut down the landfill is a question for the future. O'Donnell believes there is a good chance the town will shut down the landfill, especially with the recent discovery of illegal dumping in Area IV-B.

But one thing is certain: as long as CHL remains open, SAFE will fight to shut down the landfill.

Monument plans sail by selectmen

Herb Jason, shown here, is the prime mover behind the plan to memorialize the two assistant lightkeepers who lost their lives on the first Minot Light.

town's history is adding not taking away (from Government Island)," Selectman Ronnie McMorris said. "I admire the work and time that went into this. It's a great idea."

Assistant lightkeepers Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson perished when the first Minot Light toppled in a gale in April 1851.

Jason said Wilson and Antoine continued to perform their duties in the midst of hurricane-force winds in the unsafe lighthouse, which was built on stilts so the water could pass through.

But the sea surge caused the waves to reach the lightkeepers quarters weakening and finally toppling the lighthouse.

In a recent letter to the editor, Jason said the town of Cohasset has always remembered those who gave their lives for their country, but somehow the town has forgotten two of its bravest men.

The project's total cost is estimated at about $50,000 which will be raised through private donations and events such as a TV auction and a mystery dinner theater. Organizers say they have $15,700 in cash and commitments for labor.

"Honoring those boys has been on my mind for years," Jason wrote. "I think they deserve more than a little plaque."

This week, Jason quickly silenced any critics worried about the monument taking up too much space.

"Is 12 feet too much for two boys who lost their lives while doing their duty?" he asked.

Joseph McElroy of Windy Hill Road who was the force behind the Lightkeepers Residence renovation project on Government Island put his weight behind the proposal.

He said he is amazed how few people know about the first lighthouse and the two men who lost their lives.

"That very significant piece of maritime history tends to be lost," he said.

McElroy also put to rest the suggestion that in lieu of this project, the names of all Cohasset fishermen lost at sea over the years be listed on a monument at Government Island.

The retired Army lieutenant colonel pointed out that the town has learned from the World War II Veterans Memorial that trying to accurately include all names on a monument can be difficult. (Names of those who served in the occupational forces and some other WWII veterans were not included on the memorial, an oversight which the town is trying to correct).

The project's total cost is estimated at about $50,000 which will be raised through private donations and events such as a TV auction and a mystery dinner theater. Organizers say they have $15,700 in cash and commitments for labor.

The monument will have a four-foot deep foundation of crushed stone topped by one foot of reinforced concrete. An additional six inches on top of that will be concrete, granite and cobblestone which will comprise the ground-level compass rose and provide the base for the-1/2 ton granite stone.

"We wanted something that will last forever," Jason said about the construction.

Plans are to locate the memorial on a grassy area to the right of the templates. Wigmore Pierson, the sole historical commission member to support the project, said organizers are "flexible in terms of exact placement of the monument."

Fund-raising will take about 18 months and construction three months, said William Taylor, grant consultant for the project.

Jason said the compass will be created out of expensive, tapestry brick.

"This will be very unique and beautiful, just like the boys it represents," he said.

At the suggestion of Davenport, selectmen will ask the Design Review Board to look over Jason's plans.

COHASSET MARINER

CHS ices varsity hockey program

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High School will not be skating a varsity hockey team this season. A small turnout of players has forced the school to field only a sub-varsity hockey this winter.

Since Cohasset's absence from the South Shore League leaves the league with a void to be filled, the SSL is looking for a team to replace Cohasset.

Head coach Dennis Walsh noted the school will return to varsity hockey next year and will most likely be in a new conference due to a major realignment of leagues that will take place in 1998.

Said Walsh, "It was impossible for us to play a varsity schedule this season, since only three seniors, two juniors and no goalie turned out for practice.

"We have a lot of eighth-graders, but since the split, we can't play the eighth-graders on the varsity team."

In the past, the eighth-graders attended one school, along with the high school players. The town now has a separate intermediate school, which keeps the youngsters from playing varsity sports,

As a result, Cohasset will go with just a junior varsity hockey program this winter while it awaits help from the eighth-graders.

Greg Figueiredo, an outstanding ninth-grade hockey player, according to Walsh, will not play for the Cohasset team this year since he is playing junior hockey in Bridgewater.

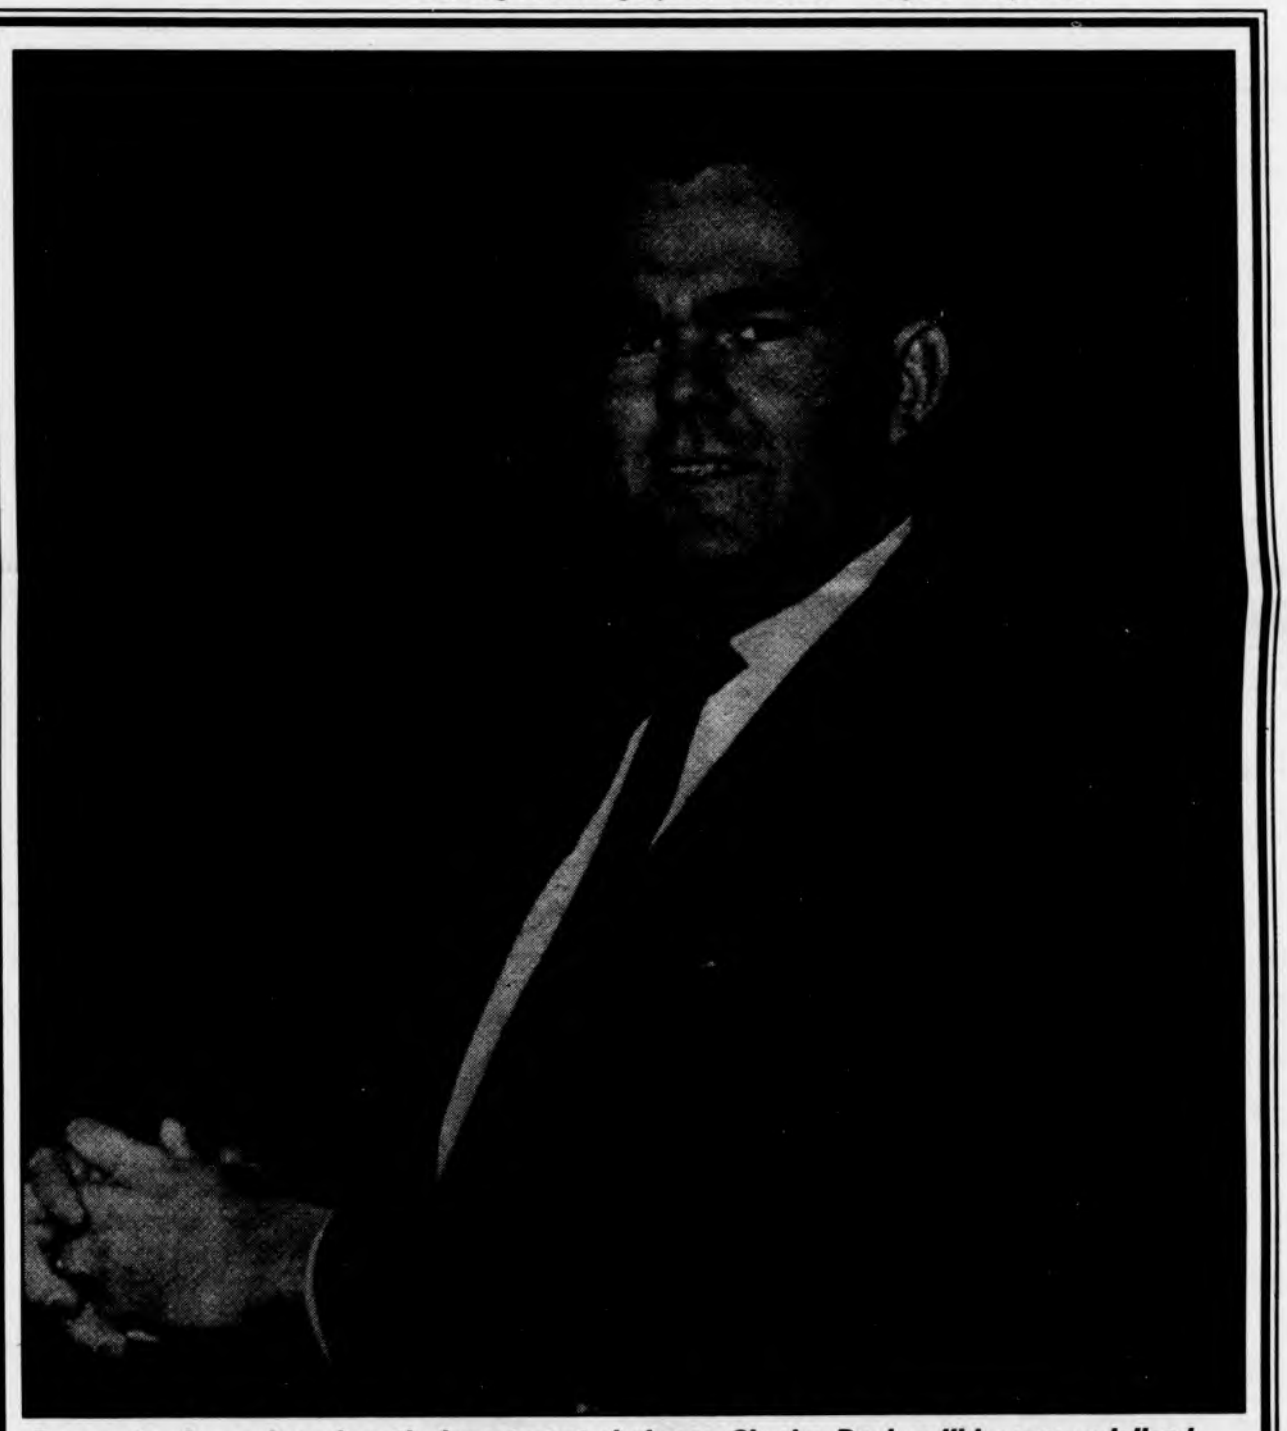
Coach Walsh doubts if Greg will ever play for a Cohasset High hockey team.

Upon learning of the change in the hockey program this season, two of the seniors who had turned out, elected not to play sub varsity hockey this season.

One senior, Adam Donovan, will play with the sub-varsity along with his sister Caitlin Donovan, a sophomore, who plays defense. Caitlin played with the varsity team last year.

Freshman Danny Williams will be trying his hand at goalie, a position he has never played, according to the coach. Danny's brother Jeremy was the varsity goalie last season. Danny volunteered to give it a shot, according to Walsh.

Two brothers who will be playing on the same line are Brad Powell and Heath Heinz.



Also playing on the team are Ryan Hubiley, Andy Curn, Billy Good and Teddy Goss.

Coach Walsh noted that a number of other youngsters will be on the team, and he will let those names out at a later date.

The JV hockey team plans to open its season Monday, Dec. 22, at Pembroke.

Former track coach and math department chairman Charles Davis will be memorialized this spring when the running track at Alumni Field is named in his honor. Davis, shown here in the yearbook that the Class of 1964 dedicated to him, was a teacher at the high school from 1961 until his untimely death in 1985.

Cohasset runners will soon find themselves sprinting along the Charlie Davis Memorial Track at Alumni Field and those who knew him couldn't be happier with the honor.

The school committee backed a proposal to dedicate the new track to the former Cohasset High School math department chairman and track coach.

Davis began at Cohasset in 1961 and was a highly respected track coach among his peers. He went on to become the head of the math department at CHS and was named as a dean of track coaches after consistently fielding highly

Despite smaller enrollment, Skippers keep chugging along

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Recently, the Cohasset Skippers like many athletic teams have been subject to many changes.

This year, a new league has been instituted, although it is only a transitory phase in preparation for next year's final destination. Also, middle school athletes, that is seventh- and eighth-graders, have been forbidden to participate on teams with high schoolers.

In a school as small as Cohasset, this has an effect on the teams.

Despite these adjustments, and having the smallest enrollment of any school, aside from currently developing Mashpee High, in the Pilgrim Conference, which includes 28 other teams, the Skippers have done quite well for themselves.

Cohasset athletic director Clark Chatterton offered some surprising statistics. Presently, the Cohasset Middle School/High School has 47 teams.

"No school I know of has more teams, and we're the smallest school by eons. I think that we are a Division 6 size school playing Division 4 size teams. As a result, some of our kids aren't fairly evaluated. Very few schools with less than 300 kids (Cohasset has 290 in grades 9-12) have both soccer and football teams.

"We have one of the best wrestling teams in the state, even though it's one of the smallest," he added. "Our baseball team can bang heads with anybody and we've had a tradition of success with our boys' basketball program. Not that winning is the bottom line, but lacrosse beat big schools last year. If we hadn't lost four or five kids to private schools, we would have been the best team in the state, period."

Indeed, in light of its size, Cohasset has had startling success.

In the South Shore League, CHS has by far the smallest enrollment; Hull is next with 370, 80 more kids than Cohasset.

Traditionally, Hull has had success in few sports other than football. From there, Norwell is a big jump with 490 students in grades 9-12 and Rockland is the SSL's largest with 660 in those four classes. Next year, Rockland and East Bridgewater (634) will both join Duxbury, Hingham, Middleboro and Scituate in the Patriot League. Cohasset will compete with Abington, Norton, Carver, Hanover, Norwell and Hull.

With the loss of the junior high to a middle school, sports at Cohasset High will be damaged; the effects have already been seen this fall. Field hockey was the only team which qualified for the state tourney.

While most seventh- and eighth-graders do not make the varsity teams, they do bolster the JV rosters, which in turn can offer mid- or late-season support to varsity teams.

Furthermore, the seventh- and eighth-graders tend to progress more quickly, in an athletic sense, if playing at a higher level, junior varsity for instance.

In the past few years, the gymnastics, baseball and tennis teams have all relied heavily on junior high students to help their squads, students who would now not be allowed to play on these teams.

Even worse than sub-par records, several teams are being slashed. Girls' junior varsity basketball has recently been eliminated, and the boys' JV squad is questionable.

The boys' basketball program went from having 55 try out last competitive teams throughout the 60s and 70s.

He died suddenly in 1985 from a blood clot in his leg that surfaced after an injury.

The tentative plans are to hold a special ceremony sometime during the Spring track season with members of Davis' family to officially dedicate the running track. "I can still remember getting the late-night phone call from a mutual friend that he had passed away," said long-time friend Curtis Collins, the principal of Cohasset High School. "I was just in shock. I didn't want to believe it was happening."

Collins and Davis both resided in Marshfield, another fact which worked to forge their friendship.

"He was this lovable, burly bear of a guy," remembered Collins. "Charlie was just a great guy and a marvelous teacher in the classroom. He had a great sense of humor but those kids learned in his classroom. You couldn't have asked for a better teacher." For CHS science teacher James Franey, the bond with Davis goes deep. They were best friends, attended Abington High School together and were the best man at each others wedding.

As well, they began their teaching career at CHS together in 1961.

"He had already been hired for the math position when he called me up and said the school was also in the market for a science teacher," Franey remembered. "Here I still am 37 years later."

Franey said his friend was "a great big Teddy Bear of a guy" who looked at each track team as his adopted children. In fact, said Franey, the only reason he stopped coaching at the high school was so that he could watch his own children at their track meets. "He loved kids and loved coaching them just as much," said Franey. "This was what he was meant to do."

Several other friends and supporters attended the recent school committee meeting to offer words in favor of the fitting dedication, including Collins, who told members of his memories of Davis.

The two were friends and coworkers throughout their careers, and both began teaching in Cohasset around the same time, Collins said. Davis' popularity prompted Collins to dub the track squad "Charlie's Traveling Circus" — he always attracted a crowd.

"Back then we used the town green for track meets, so each day during cross-country and the track and field seasons you'd undoubtedly find Charlie loading up his big truck after school with all the equipment to bring down to the field," remembered Collins. "There'd also more than likely be a group of kids hanging off the truck as well."

Collins said that connection with the kids was what made him as popular a coach and teacher as he was. "He had an unbelievable relationship with the kids," Collins added. "He had the ability to reach out and get that unique student to come out for the team or to excel within the classroom. "Charlie had the ability to reach these kids," said Collins. "He could get these kids to come out for sports who in a normal situation would not do so."

Whatever Davis did, it seemed to work just fine. His teams were always competitive and had more than their share of undefeated seasons while he was at the coaching reigns.

Cohasset Athletic Director Clark Chatterton coached alongside Davis.

"He was beloved and at all times a true gentlemen," said Chatterton. "Charlie was a man of great integrity who did a great deal of good for Cohasset High School. "There are a lot of people still here at the high school who worked side-by-side with Charlie who are extremely happy to see that we have decided to honor his memory in this fashion. It's very deserving."

He truly did have an impact on the students, even early in his teaching career. The Class of 1964 dedicated their yearbook in his honor. "You came to Cohasset High School as a teacher of mathematics but soon you made your influence felt well beyond the classroom," they wrote in the dedication. "Your face, lightened by a ready smile, quickly became familiar to everyone. As track coach and advisor to the pep club, you have clearly shown a strong interest in the student body.

"You have become a true friend to every student—a much admired and respected one."

year to 31 this season. Hockey, gymnastics and softball are also both on the endangered species list.

Despite all of these obstacles, Cohasset continues to foster a tradition of success. The boys' basketball team looks strong for this season and the girls promise to surprise some people. Lacrosse will be as strong as ever, boasting Jamie Buick as one of the elite players in the state and the baseball team is on the rise.

Maybe Chatterton put it best. "I'm proud of our kids; they're great athletes, they're smart athletes, they're good kids."

the first time a Cohasset team had to drop a varsity sport and go with just a junior varsity team.

Said Walsh, "It happened once in football. The school is small, not enough kids turned out to give the squad a reasonable representation. The school waited a year and then went on with the varsity program."

Walsh feels that with the juniors, sophomores and freshmen players that he has this year, along with the eighth-graders who will be coming up next season, Cohasset should be able to dress up a pretty decent squad in 1998-99. Walsh also announced that sometime during the season, his junior varsity team will play the South Boston High varsity team to give his youngsters some experience playing an older group.

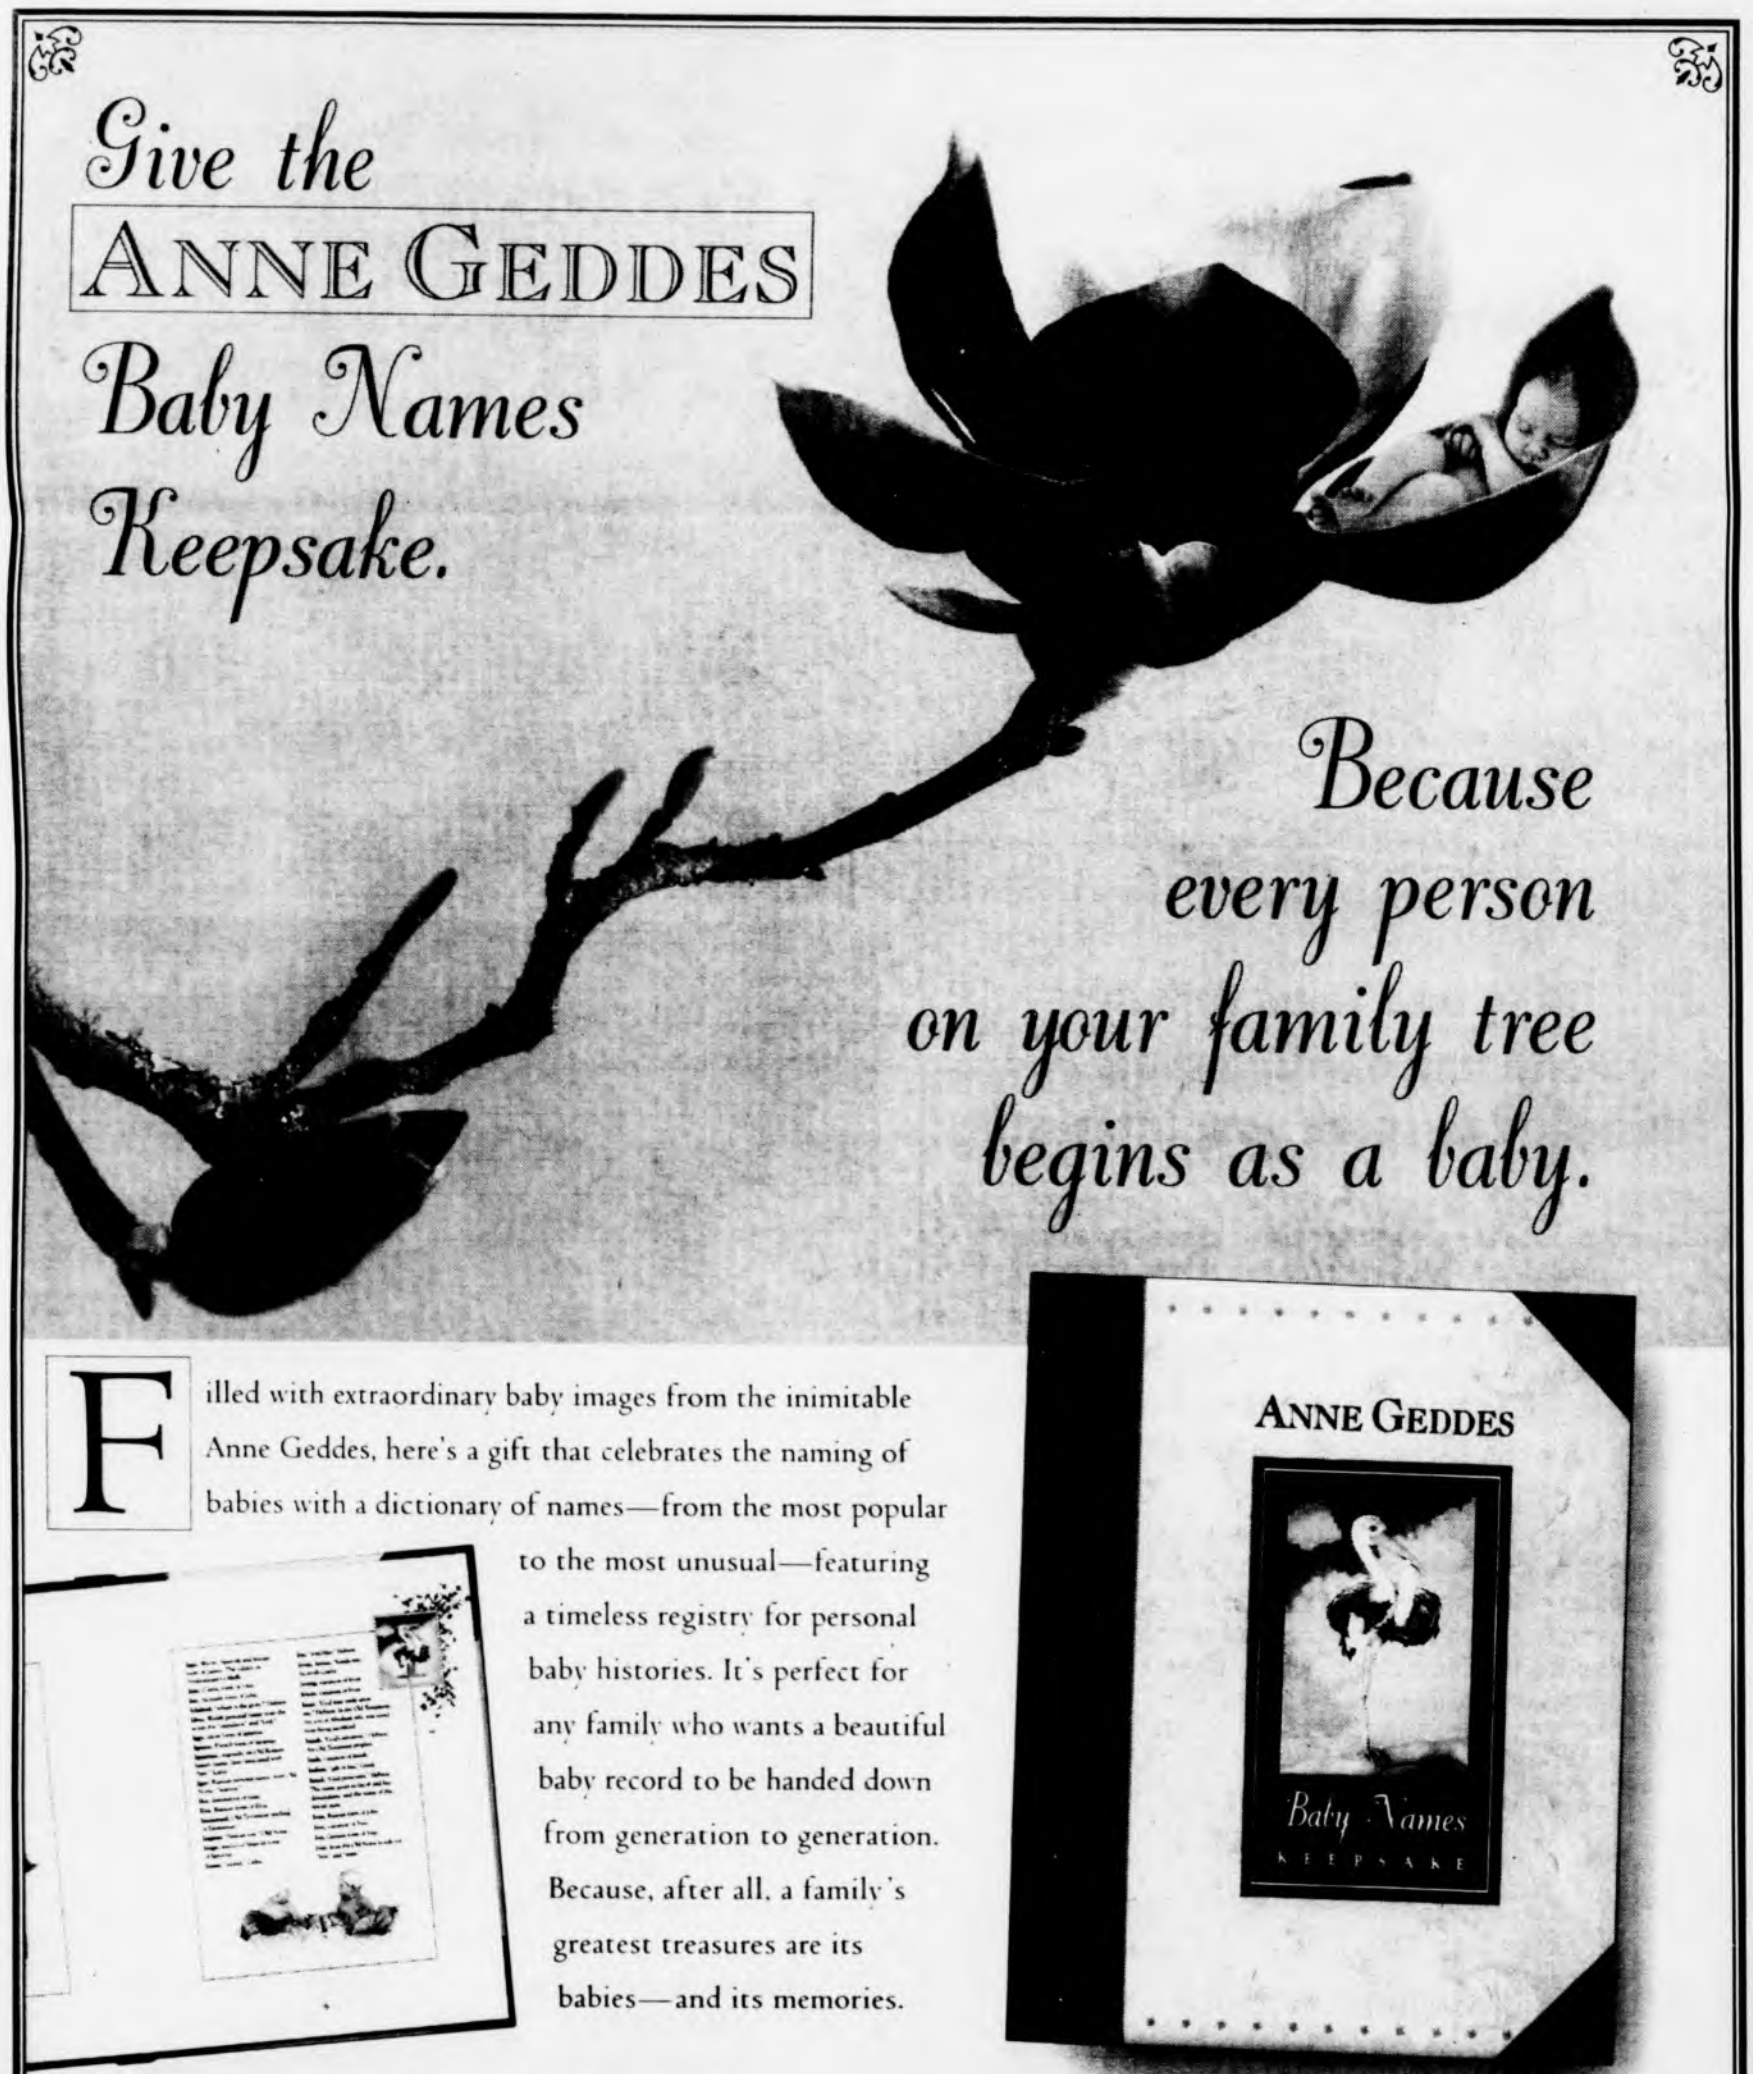
Junior lacrosse program looking for a few good coaches

Thanks to phenomenal growth in popularity and interest, the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse Club is in need of additional coaches for the Spring 1998 season. No lacrosse experience is necessary.

The reason the team can take coaches without experience is the structure of its league, the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse Association, the largest youth league in the country. The league allows communities to have more than one entry, and then allows multiple teams to be scheduled so that they always play in the same place — either home or away together — on the same day.

"We have grown to the point where there is a good chance we will want to field two teams this year," said Chuck Jaffe, who runs the junior program in Cohasset. "If we get volunteers with no experience, I can act as head coach for both teams. If we get someone with lacrosse experience, we each can coach one team. We need a helping hand more than we need an experienced hand."

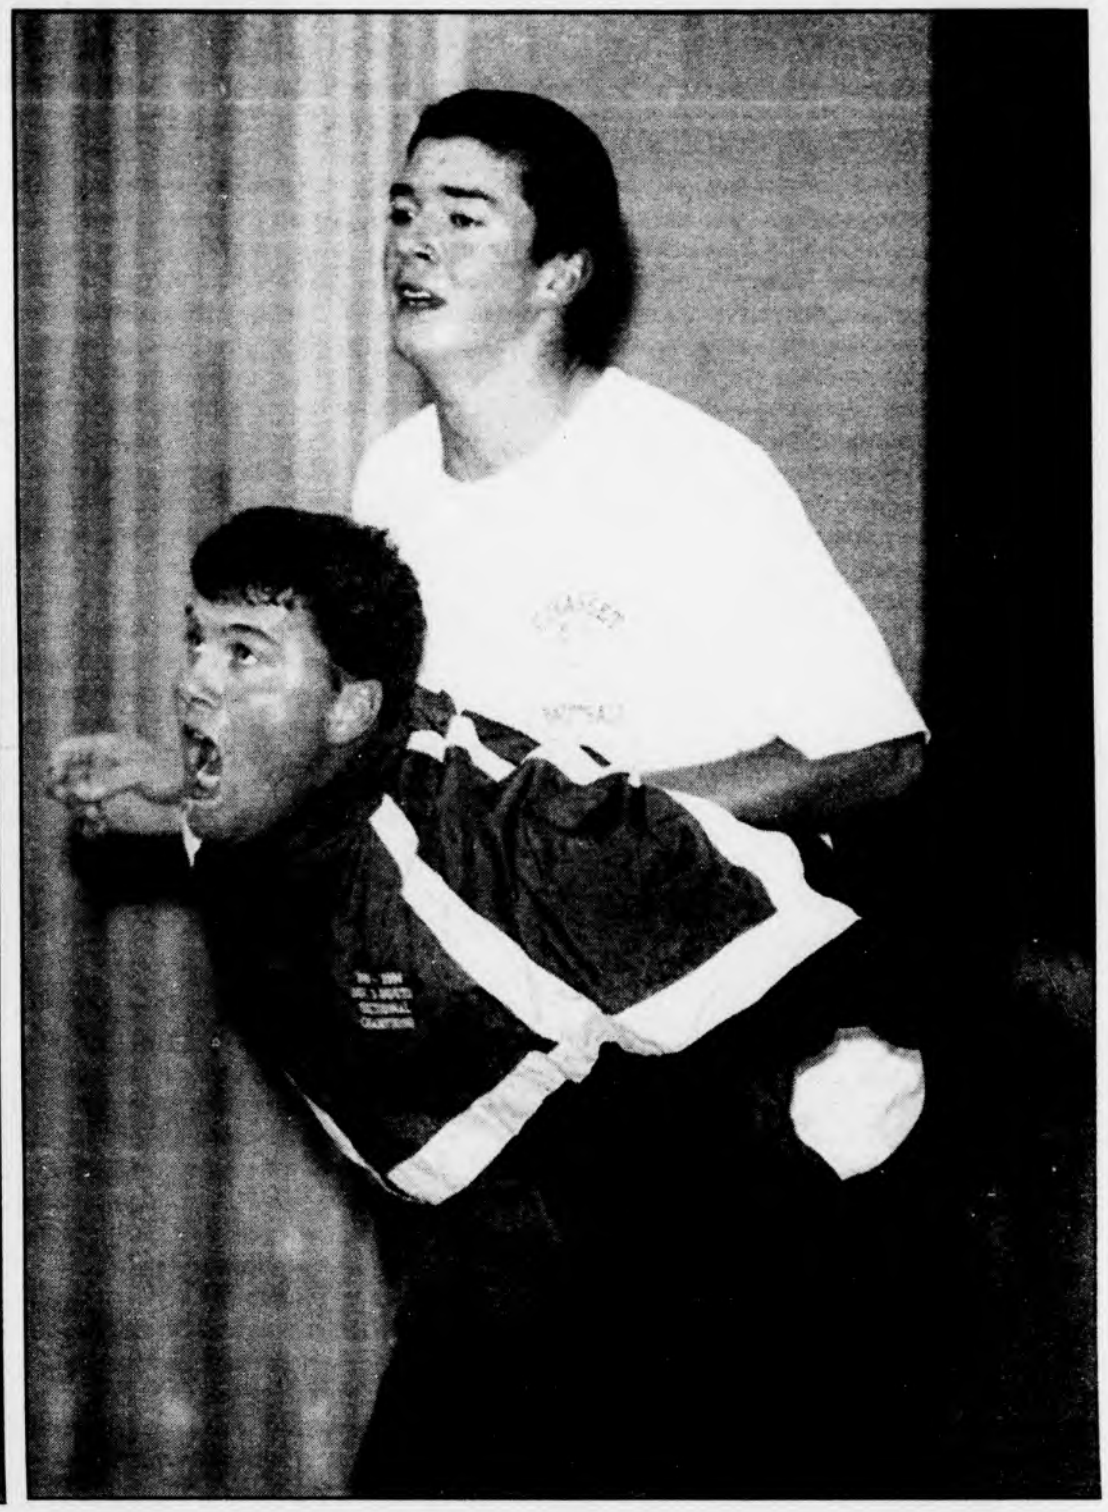


Jaffe explains that the biggest need is for a coach to assist during practices, when the only way to install an offense or defense is in small groups of players. "The rest of the kids should be doing drills or installing the same offense at the other end of the field, but that's not possible without a second or possibly a third coach," he says.

Last year, the Cohasset junior lacrosse team had 30 players, a high number within the Mass Bay youth teams. This year, thanks to a successful summer camp and increased awareness and interest, Jaffe expects closer to 40 children in grades 5 and 6 to sign up. Without at least one additional coach, Jaffe says he might have no choice but to limit the program to a single team of 30 players signed up on a first-come, first-served basis.

With sign-up set for December and the league needing notification of Cohasset's intention to field a second team by January, the program needs to hear from volunteers now. The Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League also holds a winter coaches clinic that volunteers may want to attend.

For this spring, Jaffe plans to practice the junior lacrosse program at or after 4:30 p.m. on Mondays and Fridays. Games are Sunday afternoons. Practice begins as weather permits in march, and the season ends Father's Day weekend in June.



For more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program and becoming a volunteer coach, contact Jaffe at 383-9858 or Terry Kahn at 383-0332.

IT'S HAPPENING

The Second Congregational Church sanctuary choir begins a rehearsal for the "Sounds of Christmas," a concert to be held at 4 p.m., Dec. 14, at 43 Highland Ave.

Holiday face painting at Teen Center

Holiday face painting will be offered by local artist Laurie Micarelli at the Cohasset Teen Center, 24 S. Main St., Friday, Dec. 19, from 4 to 7 p.m. The cost is $2 per child. They will also have balloons for sale for 50 cents each. For more information, call Cathy at 383-2492.

Black nativity trip slated

The Cohasset Metco Committee is sponsoring a matinee trip to Black Nativity Sunday, Dec. 21. This joyful Christmas musical is a gospel rendition of the birth of the Christ Child and a cultural gem not to be missed.

The National Center of Afro-American Artists is presenting its 28th season of Langston Hughes' gospel song play Black Nativity at Tremont Temple's Converse Hall, 88 Tremont St., Boston. This year, Deer Hill School fourth-grade Metco student Manasseh Remy and his younger brother Emyr are both members of the Black Nativity cast.

Bus transportation will be provided to and from this joyful Christmas musical free of charge. There will be a central location in Boston where the Cohasset bus will stop to pick up Boston families en route to Tremont Temple. The bus will leave Cohasset Town Hall at 2 p.m. for the 3:30 p.m. matinee performance and return to Cohasset before 7 p.m. Tickets are $25 per person and should be reserved as soon as possible by calling PSO Reps. Connie Afshar at 383-6006, or Jean Hajjar at 383-9917.

Children's illustrator to sign

Artist and illustrator Anna Vojtech will sign copies of her book, "Song of the Camels: A Christmas Poem," written by the late Elizabeth Coatsworth, Saturday, Dec. 13, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., at Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset.

In lush, luminous oil paintings, Vojtech interprets a Christmas poem by Coatsworth, one of America's foremost children's poets, to create a most unusual version of the Nativity. Haunting and evocative, this is the story of the first Christmas told from the perspective of the wise men's camels as they follow the star across the desert to Bethlehem. Elegant, exotic in words and pictures, this is a Christmas book to ponder and treasure. Call Buttonwood at 383-2665 to reserve your copy.

Cohasset woman's art takes a new direction

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Local craftswoman Ro Fitzpatrick has a treasure chest in her studio that is curiously unlike most others. Unlike most who keep a treasure chest, Fitzpatrick has shelved the valuables on the outside, not the inside of the box.

The valuables here are her paintings of flowers and topiaries, in the Bavarian folk art style that has been dubbed Bauernmalerei. The style features flowers arranged in meticulous formal patterns of intersecting triangles and represents a new direction for the Cohasset woman who has previously won recognition as a decorative painter of porcelain.

Fitzpatrick's longstanding venture is Ro-Berries, which produces hand-painted blueberry and cranberry china. The business is a team effort with husband Butch who does the casting and the firing in two kilns, burning the porcelain and the glaze to full maturity. The result is dishwasher, oven and microwave-proof creations that range from delicate creamers and pitchers with tiny stems to rugged old-fashioned cookie jars. Moreover, all the work is done in a studio converted from a barn and guarded by a cat named "Miss Lucie."

In the studio Fitzpatrick is able to work on 300 pieces of clay at a time with the pieces set up on a track —basically two tables arranged galley style. Bottles of colorful paints in baby pink and burgundy are bundled in racks around the worktable. Above it are shelves upon shelves of unfinished wood pieces, slated for the future Bauernmalerei creations.

"I look up at the wood while I'm working and decide what I want to put on it," she allowed.

The finished items are sold at two nearby outlets —Cape Cod Crafters in Hyannis (508) 775-1069 and Painted Daisies in East Sandwich (508) 375-0713.

Fitzpatrick, who previously operated the Cohasset Clay House in the village, was originally a teacher who started painting on porcelain in 1974 and then worked almost 10 years before she attempted to sell her work at the major crafts shows. A show at the Hartford Civic Center was her first, and Fitzpatrick lost some sleep over the fear she might be throwing money away foolishly when she found out the rent on a little booth at the exposition cost several hundred dollars.

"I worried people wouldn't even look at my stuff," she said.

As it turned out, however, her cares were needless.

"We were busy all weekend," she said. "We knew we were on our way then."

Today, she is proud she did things the right way, though success took years of hard work and putting in some 16 hour days. Ro-Berries is now considered a collectible. Moreover, the number of people on the mailing list has climbed above 2,000.

Ro Fitzpatrick looks over one of her hand-painted creations.

His exhibit of acrylic paintings at the Cohasset Library will continue through Dec. 31. All of the artwork is for sale.

Teen helps uncover remains of Tyrannosaur

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Instead of backpacking through Europe or taking a Mediterranean cruise over the summer, lifelong Cohasset resident Robert Morgan III embarked on an adventure through the ages to prehistoric times.

Morgan, a sixteen-year-old junior at Boston College High School, traveled to Fort Peck, Montana, last summer to crawl around in the dirt eight hours a day, six days a week in 100-degree, unshaded temperatures.

> "It was like everything I've read about science, only I finally got to do it myself."
> – ROBERT MORGAN.

But this was no ordinary dirt. The two excavation sites Morgan worked on with a team of paleontologists once served as the stomping grounds for some of the largest reptiles to ever roam the earth.

"It was hard work, but it pays off. You find some really exciting things," Morgan said of delving into and exploring the Mesozoic (225 to 65 million years ago — the age of the dinosaurs) layer of the earth.

The excitement level grew as the dig continued and the claw and pelvis of a Tyrannosaurus turned up — the largest to be discovered in North America.

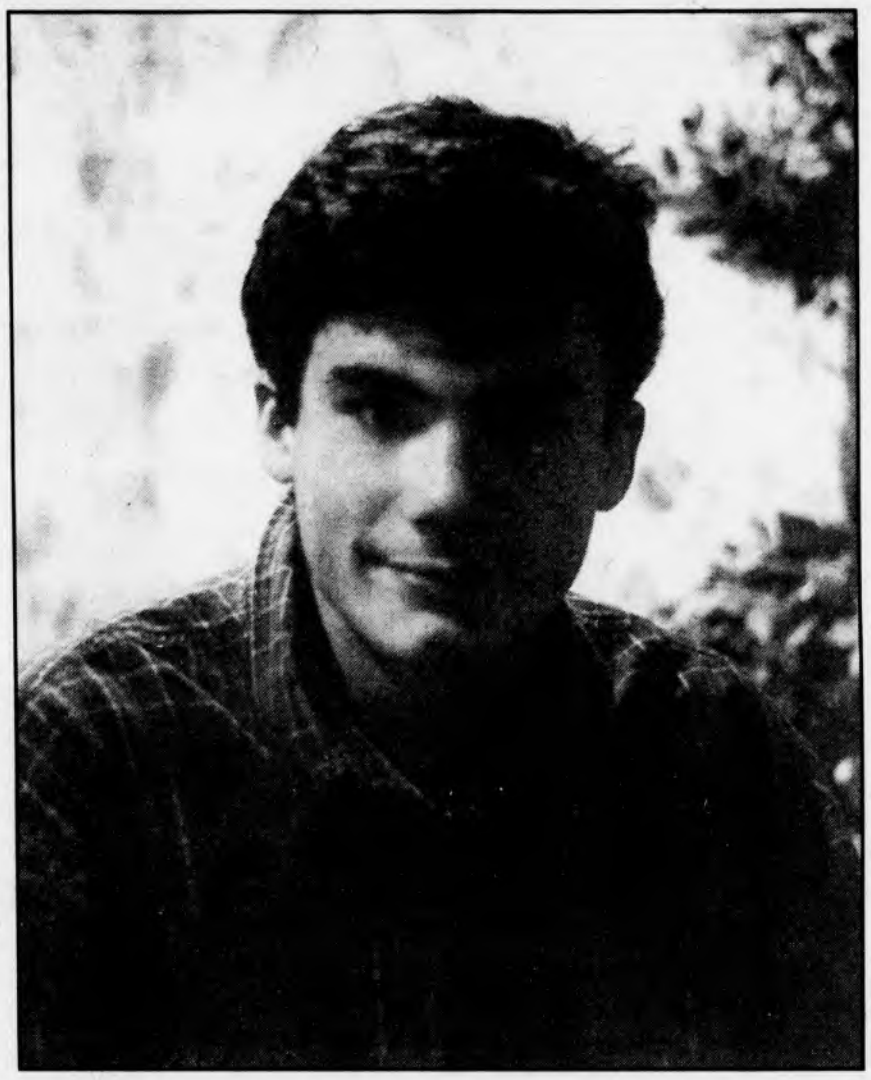
"The most exciting thing was finding the bones and seeing what no person in millions of years had seen," he recalled. "And we were the first ones to see it."

After scouting out the hillsides — undisturbed by human beings — they found bone fragments protruding from the dirt.

Using shovels, brushes and pick-like tools called awls, Morgan and the crew of about a dozen - including scientists, teachers and two college students — surveyed the two sites, uncovered fossils, encased the specimens in protective plaster casts and transported them to the lab for further study.

On the days when he worked in the lab, Morgan cleaned and reconstructed bones with clay and putty.

"It was like everything I've read about science, only I finally got to do it myself," he said.



Morgan, a member of the cross country and wrestling teams at his school, could have spent the $1,600 he raised for the trip from June 29 to July 11 countless other ways. But participating in a paleontological excavation had always appealed to him, he said.

"I've always been interested in that," he said. "Now I have a better understanding of how a scientific excavation works. I'm glad I did it."

A teacher at his school introduced him to the Earthwatch Institute, a Watertown-based science group under the direction of Notre Dame Paleontologist Keith Rigby. He worked as a dishwasher at Anastos' Corner in Hull to be able to afford the trip.

After Morgan left, other crews uncovered and identified what they believe comprises about 90 percent of the Tyrannosaur's skeleton - but not with 100 percent ease.

Thefts of artifacts and damage to the sites hindered the excavation somewhat. Earthwatch had to call in the FBI to relocate the stolen government property and guard the sites from further vandalism and burglary.

Robert Morgan, 16, of Cohasset helped uncover the remains of a dinosaur last summer in Montana.

Police make drug bust

A three-month long investigation paid off last week, when police arrested two Hull residents on drug charges.

Police have charged Robert A. Jason, 37, and Kathleen Harris, 22, with four counts each of drug violations including possession of cocaine with intent to distribute. They were arraigned on the charges Monday.

Police Officer Gregory Lennon, the lead investigating officer, said police found 24 bags or about 17.3 grams of cocaine in the 1996 Toyota pickup after stopping Jason and Harris at about 7:20 p.m., last Friday on Beechwood Street near the ballpark. The cocaine had a street value of about $1450.

Lennon said the drug bust followed a joint investigation among Cohasset Police, the South Shore Drug Task Force out of Weymouth, the Community Drug Action Response Team (CDART) of the Norfolk County District Attorney's office and the state police.

Also assisting were Cohasset Officers William Quigley, Jeffrey Treanor, Thomas DaSilva and Sgt. John Conte.

Police Chief Brian Noonan said the arrest should send a message.

"If you're dealing drugs in Cohasset, sooner or later you'll hear from us," he said.

Ferocious cat corners baby-sitter

Civilian dispatcher David Weeks said he had one of the more unusual 911 calls last week.

He said an adult baby-sitter called to report she was cornered by the family's extremely agitated cat.

"The lady called to say she was being held in an upstairs bedroom by a ferocious cat outside the door," Weeks said.

"I could hear the cat in the background," he said.

Weeks said officers Jeffrey Treanor and Thomas DaSilva responded to the scene. The cat tore up Treanor's boots but the officers were able to secure it in a back room and reunite the children with the baby-sitter.

The next day the cat's owner came into the station with scones and cookies and offered to pay for Treanor's boots, Weeks said.

Apparently the cat didn't like strangers and was trying to be protective.

"He was angry and protective and was behaving more like a dog," Weeks said.

Police log ten arrests last month

Police Chief Brian Noonan said November was a relatively quiet month for the department.

"During the month there were ten arrests," Noonan said in his monthly status report. "Six were for outstanding warrants, three for operating under the influence of liquor, and one for protective custody."

During November, there was one incidence of breaking and entering reported at a residence.

The Cohasset Emergency Dispatch Center received 92, 911 calls last month.

Noonan said he was pleased with progress on the design of the Beechwood/Route 3A intersection.

"In October, I wrote a letter to Mr. Thomas Broderick, chief engineer for Mass Highway where I cited a number of concerns I had with the redesign of the Route 3A and Beechwood Street intersection. On Nov. 28, I received his reply and am pleased to say he has agreed to implement many of the changes we have suggested," Noonan said.

He said he met with the Drug & Alcohol Committee on Nov. 12 and explained some new department programs to combat the use of drugs and alcohol.

He said Officer Clifton Jones represented the police at the Traffic Committee Meeting, Nov. 20.

The chief said he is supportive of the traffic committee's efforts to rewrite the town's Traffic Rules and Orders which were originally drafted in 1946.

Hagerty parking lot plans unveiled for selectmen

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

In a year or so, the town could have a new gravel parking lot at the Hagerty Property off Parker Avenue.

That's what engineer John Modzelewski, consultant for the project, told selectmen this week.

He will refine the drainage and grading plans by the first of the year and start the permit process which can take a year or more.

Permits are required by the Army Corps of Engineers and a variance is needed from the Zoning Board of Appeals because work will be done below the high tide level. A state waterways permit is also necessary, Modzelewski said.

The parking lot, which will be raised about two feet above its current level, will consist of 1-1/2 inches of crushed stone rolled into gravel for a relatively hard surface.

Plans are for 28 spaces including seven long spaces for cars with boat trailers. Rip-rap will be added along the water and a grassy area between the parking lot and the rip-rap will eventually include picnic tables. Plans also include a new dock next to the boat ramp and a walkway over to Government Island.

Selectmen asked the Hagerty Property Committee for an update on its progress this week on plans for a passive recreational park and parking area for the 2.2 acre site which the town bought 4-1/2 years ago.

Modzelewski explained the parking lot, which will be raised about two feet above its current level, will consist of 1-1/2 inches of crushed stone rolled into gravel for a relatively hard surface.

The grassy area between the parking lot and the water will vary from eight to 20 feet wide.

Estimates for the work are from $150,000 to $200,000. Modzelewski. said some of the items could be optional which would bring the price down.

Selectmen thought there might be federal or state grants available but were concerned that accepting grant money might mean the town has to open up the boat ramp to non-residents.

Hagerty Property Committee member Veneta Roebuck told town meeting in October that the committee, which as dwindled from 15 to about eight memb[illegible] has held 125 meetings in the four years. She explained group had to deal with demolis[illegible] ing the factory buildings, finding a use for the old boat house and trying to grapple with the Hagerty house, which at one time they considered leasing out or moving across Parker Avenue to a private marina.

Plans are now for the Hagerty House to be leased for use as a Lobster Lab, a marine educational center.

Before the town bought the site, the Hagerty property was home to Cohasset Colonials, a furniture kit manufacturing company, which is now located on Beal Street in Hingham.

Dean Morrissey at Christopher Gallery

The Christopher Gallery will host a personal appearance by artist and author Dean Morrissey Dec. 13. Dean Morrissey will be at the gallery for a book signing and drawing demonstration from noon to 2 p.m. to celebrate the release of his new book "The Great Kettles — A Tale of Time."

There will be an open house and reception from 6 to 8 p.m.

The young and the young at heart will be enchanted by the luminous artwork of Dean Morrissey, whose style is reminiscent of the old masters. Art collectors are always fascinated by his unique ability to transform common objects into radiant images that seem to glow from within his resplendent paintings and the unlimited possibilities they suggest appeal to the child in everyone.

A native of Boston, Morrissey lives on the South Shore with his wife and young son. He has worked as an award-winning illustrator for more than a decade, creating book covers to portray the stories of others. As evidenced by the incredible detail in his dazzling paintings, he is a master storyteller himself. Morrissey created both the original art and story for his critically acclaimed first book, and best-selling children's classic, "Ship of Dreams," published by Harry N. Abrams. His new book, "The Great Kettles — A Tale of Time," traces the continuing adventures of little Joey, the fictional hero of his tale.

For more information and to reserve your personalized copy of either book, call the Christopher Gallery at (800) 383-1801.

Health board eyes smokeless town

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The government clamp down against cigarette smoking picked up more steam at the local health board meeting Tuesday. This time, the target was restaurants and lounges, and this newest no-smoking proposal from the Tobacco Control Program turned out to be unexpectedly strict.

If town meeting voters go along with the proposed changes, the community stands to become the first on the South Shore to uphold a total smoking ban in eateries and lounges.

That could mean as soon as this spring, smokers who light up over dinner or drinks here could be taking heat from authorities.

Nonetheless, even though health board members decided to go ahead with the harsh wording and the total ban, pending a review by the town's lawyer, they did leave open the possibility the amended bylaw could be watered down significantly. That could include exemptions from the no-smoking regulations for lounges and bars.

"If you want to allow smoking in the bars, you should do two things," said health agent Joseph Godzik, citing the need for a separation between the bar

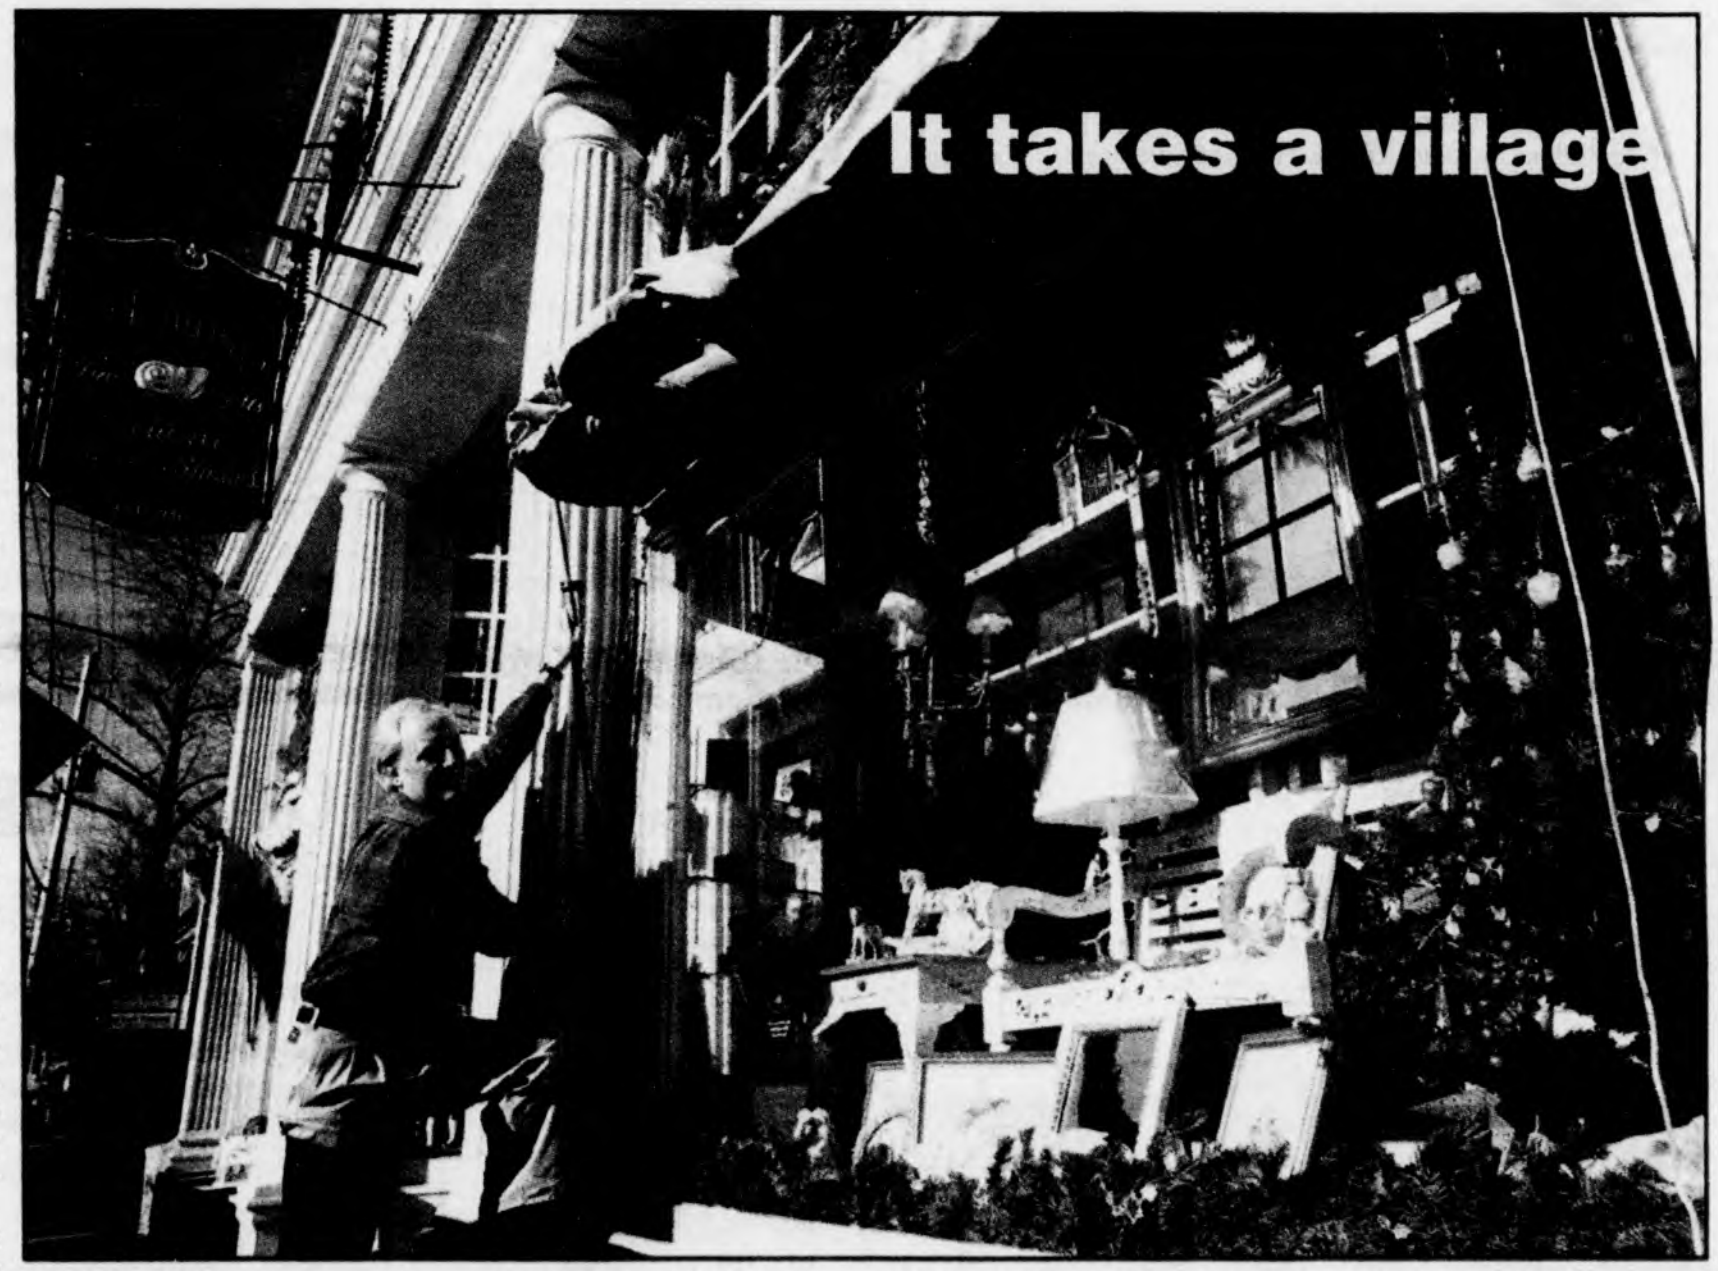
Stores look to future

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT



Business is good in Cohasset Village these days.

The owners of The Silver Spoon restaurant want to expand, but cannot find a suitable space in the Village. The Red Lion Inn is under new management with plans to finally re-open sometime between next spring and next June. And voters at the fall special town meeting appropriated $10,000 in seed money to construct a new sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's Church.

Some say the Village looks good in the present day, and its future is bright. But there remains much to be done to make sure the good times remain. Business leaders are optimistic that the town will finally step in and help revitalize the Village.

"In talking with merchants here and there in the Village, folks seem to be pretty happy although

Student of English architecture puts talent to work

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

When the Osgood students and teachers move into new quarters next September, students will enjoy school in a brand new building that has gone up under the painstaking supervision of a man who previously has built numerous schools in England.

It might be said Simon Tempest is uniquely qualified to build a school.

On the construction dig at the Cohasset Elementary School, Tempest acts as the surrogate eyes and ears of town officials.

But Tempest, who's officially been dubbed the project representative here, takes on a bit more responsibility than the ordinary clerk of the works. In fact, unlike other site supervisors, he is also an architect who has built schools before.

Schools in England, that is.

Though American born, Tempest grew up in Great Britain, with the steeples of Oxford University towering over his childhood home. Practically every day of his boyhood, he walked over cobblestone streets and little stone bridges where poets and statesmen traveled before him. Later, studying architecture in London, amid the brilliant churches and public buildings constructed in the 17th Century by Christopher Wren, Tempest also spent some of his student days living in Mayfair — the section of the city noted for its Georgian architecture and white Portland

Ambulance billing update

The fire department billed for 29 ambulance transports last month for a total amount due of $10,725.27. During the same period the town collected $8,271.43 for ambulance service, although some of that amount may be applied to prior month's bills.

So far this fiscal year, which started July 1, the town is due $55,701.44 for ambulance service and has collected $44,505.66, some of which may apply to bills from prior fiscal years.

Bumper pads sought for floats

Hamilton Tewksbury of the Government Island Study Committee has suggested the sailing club install "bumpers" between their floats and the old "oil house," a small brick building, on Government Island.

Tewksbury said the sailing club has placed floats on three sides of the historic oil house and tied them together so when the tide is high, they float and bump the three sides of the structure.

"It's possible to cause damage to the brick walls of the oil house," he said.

Haddad sent a copy of Tewksbury's letter to the harbormaster and asked him to respond.

Upcoming town government meetings are noted

The following meetings have been posted at town hall:

Conservation Commission, 7:30 p.m., Dec. 18, Jan. 8 & 22;

Cohasset Council on Aging to receive grant

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, announced recently that the Executive Office of Elder Affairs will soon be mailing a grant award notice to the Cohasset Council on Aging. Preliminary figures for this grant award were released earlier this year, however, during the legislative process, funding was increased for the Councils on Aging. This increased has made available $3.70 per elder, with an available minimum of $2,000 regardless of community size.

Sen. Hedlund has worked to secure funding for the Councils on Aging in all eight towns within his district. The Cohasset Council on Aging will receive a grant in the amount of $5,002 for the purposes of employing a part-time Nutrition Site Manager, expanding outreach activities and producing a brochure and funding dues.

"The Cohasset Council on Aging is an important part of the community. This grant will do much to improve the services and resources of this organization," Hedlund said.

Area code deadline reprieve on line

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Telephone users have been given another brief respite from making the transition to new area codes.

"The urgency has been pushed off a bit," said DPU Executive Director Timothy J. Shevlin Jr. "A lot of people were concerned about the timing, especially alarm companies and small retailers who thought the change could cause a loss of business over the holidays."

On Nov. 20, the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) decided to extend the permissive dialing period for an additional month, from Dec. 31 to Feb. 1, 1998. (Initially, the permissive dialing period was due to expire Dec. 1.) That means customers can use either the new or old area code of the telephone number they are dialing and it will go through.

In September, two new area codes were assigned in eastern Massachusetts in response to the growing demand for communication services in the state.

"While changes are going on in the system, the urgency isn't so apparent to customers," Shevlin said.

The DPU mainly based its decision to move the transition date forward on the fact that alarm companies needed more time to accomplish the reprogramming of customers' equipment.

"These companies need to individually program alarm equipment in customers' homes (i.e., respirators), and they need a long lead time," Shevlin said.

The DPU considered the issue to be a public safety concern, because customer service representatives need to physically go into homes, while some companies can reprogram changes throughout their systems automatically.

The DPU is also allowing for optional 10- or 11-digit dialing for local calls between area codes so customers can continue dialing them as they have been doing in the past.

"These changes should make implementation of the new area codes friendlier and safer for consumers," said acting DPU chair Janet Gail Besser.

There will be a two-month transition period from Feb. 1-April 1 during which Bell Atlantic will phase in mandatory dialing. That will be followed by a one-month mandatory dialing/announcement period from April 1-May 1.

During that time, Bell Atlantic will phase in mandatory dialing, but some communities will be transitioned earlier than others.

During that period, consumers should use the new area codes to complete calls. If they fail to do so, an announcement will instruct them to do that. The announcement period has been shortened by one month from the earlier plan. In an effort to compensate for this change, the DPU is requiring Bell Atlantic to expand its consumer education efforts.

> "Expanded education should make this transition process as easy as any major change can possibly be."
> —DPU CHAIR JANET GAIL BESSER.

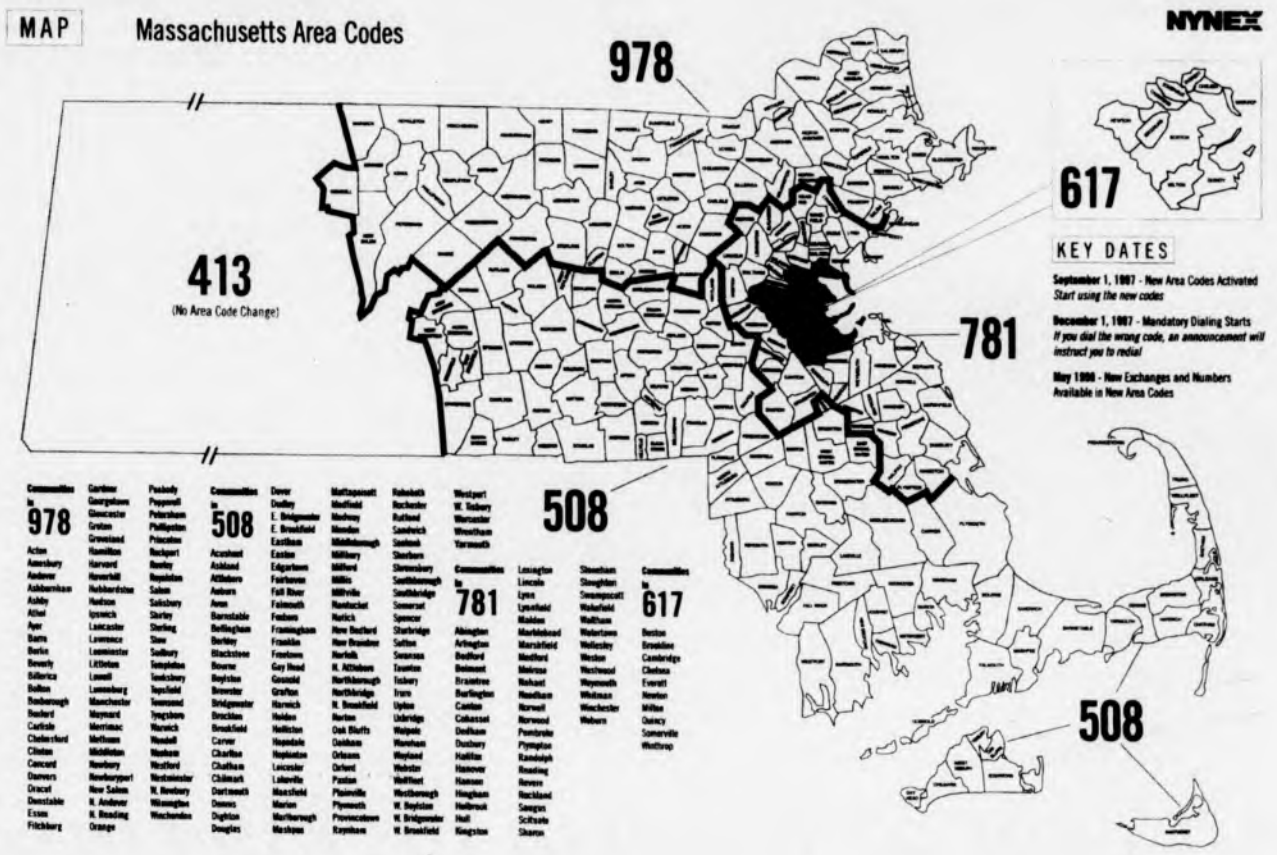
"Abiding by the Feb. 1 date is recommended, because customers could be caught short if they aren't aware of when their individual community will be changed over to the new mandatory period," Shevlin said.

Bell Atlantic was require to submit its expanded plan to the DPU by Dec. 5 for approval. The education initiative will be implemented by Bell Atlantic from Jan. 1-May 1.

"Expanded education should make this transition process as easy as any major change can possibly be," Besser said.

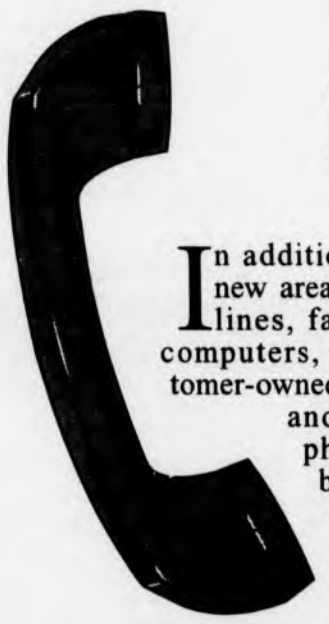
Also beginning Feb. 1, the DPU ordered Bell Atlantic to allow consumers to dial local calls between area codes using either 10 or 11 digits. Consumers have used 11-digit dialing for these calls for the past four years, but in September, the DPU initially required a new 10-digit dialing method for those calls.

The DPU reversed its decision in an effort to alleviate confusion among consumers due to the introduction of the new 10-digit dialing pattern at the same time they would be adjusting to the new area codes.



That means customers can dial a number either with or without a "1" and the call will go through whether or not the "1" is needed.

However, if a customer doesn't dial the mandatory toll indicator of "1" when it is required, the call won't go through with the 10 digits (area code and 7-digit phone number). A recording will come on and the caller will be requested to dial the number again using a "1."



According to Shevlin, the DPU has determined a "1" should be required for a toll call.

"We want customers to be sensitized to the fact that they are making a toll call and the meter is running," said Shevlin.

For further information, consumers may call NYNEX at 1 (800) 203-7967.

Don't get hung up with new area code changes

In addition to dialing new area codes, voice lines, fax machines, computers, pagers, customer-owned pay phones, and cellular phones should be adjusted according to the new telephone exchanges where necessary. Friends and business associates should also be notified, and Medical alert and PBX systems should be adjusted.

Bell Atlantic offers the following information:

¥ For local calls within the same area code, dial the 7-digit telephone number;

¥ For local calls to a different area code, dial the area code plus the 7-digit telephone number (it is not necessary to dial a "1" when making local calls to another area code);

¥ For calls to anywhere outside the local calling area, dial 1 plus the area code plus the 7-digit telephone number;

¥ The new area codes do not affect rates or local calling areas Ñ a local call is still a local call and a toll call is still a toll call; and ¥ Cities and towns in the (413) area remain unchanged.

South Shore communities whose area code has been switched from (617) to (781) include:

Abington, Braintree, Canton, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Randolph, Rockland, Scituate and Weymouth.

In all, about half the customers in Eastern Massachusetts will change the area code portion of their phone numbers as a result of the recent change in area codes.

Bell Atlantic recommends companies announce/publish their new area code through recorded messages, classified advertising, Internet sites, signage and other promotional materials.

Stationery, business cards, invoices, purchase orders, brochures, catalogues, promotional materials, checks, company directories, labels, product packaging and internal records should also be changed to include the new area codes.

Brendon Potter, owner of Potter Insurance Agency on Downer Avenue in Hingham, said his company hasn't done "anything major" yet.

"We've kind of let it slide because (the DPU) keeps amending the deadline when customers will be required to use the new area code," he said.

The timing has been an issue.

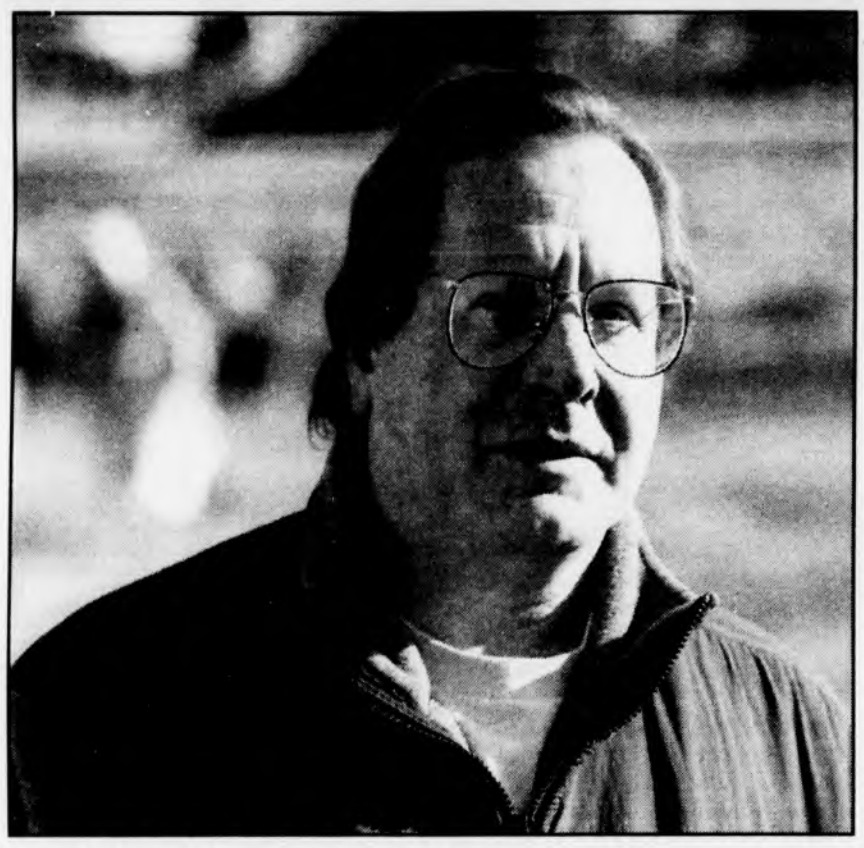
"We want to be sure the deadline has been finalized before throwing out our old stationary and changing our address stamps," Potter said. "We want to be sure the new system is up and running first."

Many people are still confused about how to dial and find themselves redialing frequently.

"I expect to have a call go through on the second or third try," Potter said. "The big thing in talking to people is they don't know what number or area code to dial anymore."

Linda Bourbeau, office manager for Alexander Mortgage Corporation in Hingham said the transition has been easy in some ways, but not in others for her company.

"Some of the simple clerical duties such as changing the letterhead and area codes in the company's files have been easy," she said.



However, in dealing with companies in other states, such as Georgia and Virginia, for example, the issue becomes more complex.

"We've given people in other states our new area code, but they can't reach us. They just keep getting a fast busy signal," said Bourbeau. "We give clients the company's new area code, but we notify them it might not work. That way they can reach us by dialing the old one."

NYNEX will automatically reprogram or modify Centrex systems, foreign exchange services, NYNEX White Page listings (beginning January, 1998), remote lines, voice messaging, Call Forwarding II and selective blocking services for 550, 554, 900, 920, 940 and 976 exchanges.

Customers should still dial "911" to reach emergency services.

More information is available at the Bell Atlantic web site at www.nynex.com/areacode. Bell Atlantic has already sent out mailings with the new area codes listed.

Tempest, new school project score good marks

By Margo Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

Having architect Simon Tempest handle the duties of the clerk of the works has so far worked out successfully, according to schools superintendent Stephen Hart.

"We've been very pleased with his work," the superintendent said. "He's very committed to the project."

Construction, Tempest said, is on the "fast track" with a completion date slated for July, with the punch lists, the paving and the curbing to be finished up by mid-August. It's an ambitious project, but along with the practical benefits of having an extra architect on site, Tempest provides an extra dividend due to his insights about the overall design of the school building.

"A lot of architects want a building to be a statement," he said. "I suppose it should be a statement that education is paramount."

Nonetheless, Tempest said the new school mostly reflects Cohasset.

"It's a very simple building, a straight forward building with very good material and it fits in the local vernacular," he said.

Ironically, the new school has been designed to look smaller than it really is with the roof somewhat concealed under a series of small pitched slopes built off projections over the teachers' rooms and above the roof line. The slopes are something of a compromise. Tempest said it wasn't practical to put a pitched roof on such a big building. (The school is actually two stories high in the front but only one level in the back to look like a natural part of the surrounding scene.)

To break up the bulk, the architect called for wide overhanging eaves to create a shadow line over the building, he said.

The exterior is red brick with a band of cream brick also to break up the mass.

"It's a pretty good design," he said and suggested the simple exterior combined with an exciting interior layout and use of color is the best way to do a school to create an exciting classroom. The colors call for pale pastels and "really bright banners" made from a material like the rugged silk used in parachutes.

One room other schools might not have is called the Roman forum. It is a stepped area that leads from the entrance to the second floor area under the skylight, he said.

"The forum is lined with wood paneling," Tempest said, noting it might be used as a place for puppet shows or storytelling. It is next to the library on the second floor, a spacious room with a nice layout featuring radial book stacks.

The school was designed by Boston architect Earl Flansberg. The project architect is William Warren, and the project manager is Sid Bowen.

But Tempest is basically the eyes and ears of the town, seeing that the work is performed correctly and inspecting the quality of the materials.

Student of English architecture puts talent to work

stone-faced houses banked with window boxes flowing over with flowers.

That all turned out to be good training for his current role in Cohasset. Moreover, once he came to work in America, Tempest found while his English upbringing had given him a somewhat distinct point of view on the issues of town planning and the construction of municipal buildings, it was a point of view very compatible with Cohasset, Tempest believes cities and towns should be designed like Cohasset —on a human scale, as is also the case in London.

"It's hard to build in England," Tempest said, citing strict planning laws and numerous design reviews. Though not against development altogether, the architect thinks communities benefit by cracking down on new construction projects.

"In England there are very strong planning laws," he said. "You benefit from that."

Specifically, Tempest said new builders are required, through a process of numerous design reviews, to keep the new project consistent with the surrounding architecture — a level of consistency the architect called "building in the vernacular."

Though the laws here are not yet tough enough, Tempest sees towns like Cohasset moving in the right direction.

"We build all of these horrible shopping malls," he said. "But people really want something like Cohasset. It's the mainstream America which I love."

Tempest said though there is a trend to design more buildings on a human scale (such as Seaside on the Florida West Coast and a Disney venture) people in Cohasset have some of the best in American architecture already.

"It's pretty nice here," he said about the quality of the architecture.

Tempest said his dream project would be his own house.

"I just want something very simple," he said. "Actually, it is already designed. It's a large space with lots of books, big fireplaces and it's functional."

But Tempest acknowledged he is slightly baffled Americans want to build in a particular style.

"In England, we already have that," he said.

Committee to tackle youth center concept

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A new youth center, including activities for teenagers, could fall under the auspices of the recreation director.

Selectmen agreed this week to set up a committee consisting of four students and four adults, with recreation director Jack Worley as the coordinator, to examine the possibilty of establishing a youth center.

Anyone interested in serving on the committee should contact the selectmen's office by Jan. 5.

Adding $15,000 to $20,000 to the recreation budget to hire an assistant for Worley was also put on the table.

The idea for the committee sprung from selectmen's view that there are too many groups in town operating separately.

The exisiting Teen Center, proposed teen center in the former DPW garage, and plans for a skateboard park are examples, they said.

"They are all good ideas," Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said. "But they are all tapping fund-raising resouces which are being tapped out."

The current teen center, which is staffed with a part-time director and attracts only about 10 young teens one night on the weekend, costs $800 to $1,000 to operate including insurance costs. Board members of Cohasset Youth Resources, Inc., which runs the teen center, said they would like to consider turning the center over to the town.

Selectmen would like the see the DPW garage turned into a teen center for both junior high and high school kids.

Anthony Bramblett, a high school student who provided the impetus behind the garage proposal, was at first very reluctant to join forces.

"We're really ready to move forward and to tie it up in all this bureaucracy really halts the momentum here," he said.

Sullivan said getting the town involved might actually create momentum for the project.

Joseph McElroy of Windy Hill Road suggested enough money be budgeted in the next fiscal year for an assistant to Worley.

Worley was enthusiastic about the youth center concept but cautious about the new duties it would require.

"From an administrative point of view, yes certainly I could do it," he said. "But to micro-manage every little thing, no."

Hingham Police Officer Michael Peraino, who is that town's DARE officer, was on hand and described the Hingham recreation program for teens that is held after school from 3 to 6 p.m. and attracts 30 to 40 kids a day.

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to do an assessment on the Independence Building, which is currently used as the teen center, should the town decide to sell it.

Quonset huts septic plan accepted

There is good news about the Quonset huts at 432 South Main St. Long known as the ugliest buildings in Cohasset, they're are step closer to becoming history.

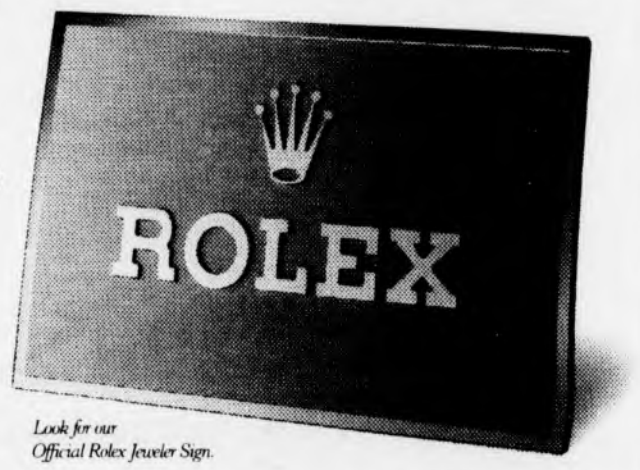
Tuesday, the plan to raze them and build five condos on the site cleared a hurdle at the health board when the majority of the panel accepted a condo system septic plan with minor conditions.

However, Chairwoman Alix White took a stand against the septic plan. Previously, White has questioned the move to construct a shared system without the reserve area that would be required on a new septic system construction. (This system was deemed an upgrade, due to the previous septic system for the huts.)

The owner of the huts is attorney Noel Collins. After the structures are demolished, Collins has plans to build five condo units in three buildings — one building with a single unit and two with two units. The homes will be New England style Colonials in the price range from $350,000 to $400,000.

Getting back to spiritual basics

The Task Force on Spirituality and Healing of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset has scheduled their third workshop for the general public under the heading of "Pathways to Healing III." At their most recent gathering (Jan. 22), "Pathways to Healing II," Dr. Bruce Indek, a local chiropractor, presented a talk on "Universal Innate Healing Energies," helping us understand some of the basic inter-connections involved in natural and spiritual healing practices. Then, Charles Mangat-Ray ("Raj"), a local, retired yoga master, led through four specific yoga breathing techniques aimed at benefits in circulation, diet control and energy.



On Wednesday, Feb. 26, at 7:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church (next to Cohasset Town Hall), the task force has invited John Loupos (of Jade Forest on Route 3A) to present his thoughts on the connection between the practice of Tai Chi and wellness. He will then spend the rest of the workshop introducing some of the attitudes and movements of Tai Chi.

Future workshops will feature area physical therapist and Reiki master Marcia Hood (March 19, 7:30 p.m.), author and artist Joan Drescher (April 9, 7:30 p.m.) who will share art as healing therapy; and a Healing Fair with four to six practitioners conducting simultaneous 30-minute demonstrations, is tentatively scheduled for Wednesday, May 21, from 7 to 9:30 p.m. A 10-week course entitled "Eight Weeks to Wellness," based on Dr. Andrew Weil's book, "Spontaneous Healing," is planned for late April through June. The events are free and open to the public. Call 383-0345 for directions or further information.

Merchants look to promising future

there is still a lot of room for improvement," said Dean Rizzo of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. "The owners of Village Winery and Circa are pleasantly surprised with the Village. It's nice to see new businesses that bring a great presence to the Village."

Rizzo said the Village is looking much better now than a few years ago when empty storefronts seemed the rule rather than the exception. Now there are only one or two empty stores, and some businesses are even lamenting the lack of decent space.

"I would like to expand to accommodate a larger seating area," said Denise Bismore, owner of Silver Spoons Restaurant. "I had planned to expand into another Village location, but it didn't work out. Now I'm waiting for something else to open."

Bismore said business is very good and she could do even better with a larger seating area. Silver Spoons has outgrown both its seating area and kitchen space, Bismore said.

Bismore said the outlook for the Village is good, thanks in part to the efforts of the chamber of commerce. She cited the farmer's market as one of the chamber's initiatives that has attracted more business to the Village.

Still, Bismore thinks there is a lot more that could be done to improve the Village. She suggested the town try to attract a movie theater or more small shops to bring potential customers to the Village.

Frank Smith of Fleming's is also enjoying a booming business, thanks to a good holiday shopping season and a little specialization.

"It's been non-stop since Thanksgiving," Smith said.

Established in 1931, Fleming's has been in the Village for the past 15 years. Smith attributes his success to a silver re-plating business that attracts a lot of people from Boston and the suburbs.

"I saw the handwriting on the wall a few years ago," Smith said. The Village is a jewel, but it's not a visitors destination on the South Shore. I feel strongly that businesses can survive here, but they must be different somehow."

Room to Improve

Smith also sees a lot of room for improvement. He wishes the town would become active in decorating the Village for the holidays to make it more hospitable to foot traffic.

"Even some wreaths would be nice," Smith said.

Smith did have praise for plans by the town to develop a master plan to revitalize the Village in the future.

And other smaller events are adding to the optimistic outlook of Village merchants.

Rizzo said one of the key elements missing from the Village is more hotel rooms to attract tourists and visitors who spend money in town.

The Red Lion Inn is once again under new management committed to reopening the historic business as a rustic New England Inn.

Currently, the bar is open daily for drinks and a limited food menu.

New manager Joe Dooley said the Red Lion Inn will open no later than next June with expanded rooms, a larger staff, a modern kitchen and a full service restaurant.

"We get at least 10 calls a day from people asking us if we're going to re-open," Dooley said. "I've been letting people know we're going to do it right. In the past, it's been run like a rooming house instead of a hotel."

Rizzo said the addition of new hotel rooms to the Village is key to revitalizing the area.

"Certainly if there's going to be a revitalization, we need to bring in people from outside to make it work," Rizzo said. "Cohasset is a lot like the quaint, popular villages filled with bed and breakfasts and inns that are located all along the coast of Nova Scotia."

Merchants agree that more steps need to be taken to make the Village more attractive to consumers and visitors. Better parking, public toilet facilities, and improved sidewalks are some of the improvements needed to help the Village flourish.

"It's hard for merchants in a small town like Cohasset," Rizzo said. "Businesses need to hang in there and establish a following. But it's very difficult because they are drawing business from a very small population and the Village is not a thoroughfare."

Town needs to ante up

But these improvements can be done only by the town. And to improve the Village, the town is going to have to spend some money.

Town meeting voters decided to spend $10,000 commissioning an engineering study for the downtown sidewalk, making Cohasset eligible for a $125,000 state grant.

And Rizzo is optimistic about the new Cohasset Village Task Force created by selectmen Monday night.

"The town cares and is willing to help out," Rizzo said. "This is a nice example of a partnership between the town and the business community. If the town shows a commitment, the merchants will respond."

The task force will draw members from other town committees to examine issues related to the Village.

Members of the task force include selectmen Nan Roth and Ronnie McMorris, Jackie Dormitzer of the Village Renaissance Committee, Dean Rizzo and Jim Sandell of the Village Revitalization Committee, Josiah Stevenson of the design review board, and citizens-at-large Betsy Mallard and Timothy O' Brien.

Selectmen must still appoint a member from the historical commission. The planning board declined to appoint a representative to the task force.

The task force's first job will be to examine architects' proposals for the downtown sidewalk.

There are other reasons for optimism. The Village charrette conducted last year is laying the groundwork for a master plan of improvements to rebuild the Village.

The task force will also help the town apply for a grant to commission a study of the viability of linking the Village to the harbor.

"The task force needs definable and reasonable goals, effective leadership, and a common vision," Rizzo said. "Our hope is that we can transform the Village in as few as five to seven years with new sidewalks, improved road patterns, well-lit municipal parking and pedestrian walkways."

Rizzo said he hopes the task force can accomplish the formidable goal of putting Cohasset Village on the map and telling the world that it's here and ready for business.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their weekly meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-9900 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. Mondays.

Osgood eyed for use as possible new library

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Just last week selectmen wondered what the options be forthcoming for the 70-year-old school due to close in June and planned to ask the Osgood School Reuse Committee for an update.

But Monday, part of their question was answered with one of the first public expressions of interest in the venerable old building. Osgood will shut its doors in June because next fall it is being replaced by a new elementary school which is now under construction behind the Deer Hill School.

The library has tentative interest in using a portion of Osgood, said library trustees chairman Patience Towle, who stressed any plans are very preliminary.

Specifically, she said the library is interested in possibly relocating to the 12,900 square foot original section of the school built in 1929 which has no interior load-bearing walls. A large, undivided open space is preferable in a library because it requires less staffing, Towle explained.

With only nine spaces, parking at the library is limited. Adding an addition to the Paul Pratt library would also be problematical. Towle said the library could not expand out the back or to either side. A room could be added to the third floor but then an elevator would be required taking up more needed space.

"We really can't add on," she said. "We've always tried to stay within the building. No one doesn't love it and think it does wonderful things as a library."

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library built in 1903 is 8,000 square feet and with the advent of computers is getting more cramped.

"Perhaps reference books will become obsolete in the 21st century," Towle said. "But at the moment we need both computers and reference books."

Towle said the trustees have watched Duxbury turn an old school into a library.

"We wanted to try to make sure Osgood is not torn down while we get hard facts," she said. Town Manager Mark Haddad advised the trustees to communicate their interest to the selectmen.

"While it's very exciting, it's a long way from having it make sense financially and being the right thing for the library and the town," Towle said.

"We just felt it was our responsibility to look at the possibility before the building got away."

She said if the move is feasible, the library would seek grants and private funding but some money would have to come from the town.

Towle envisions the two Osgood additions, built in 1929 and 1949 being used for other activities, such as a teen/recreation center, day-care center or even senior housing.

Long-time library director closes chapter

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

After 29 years as director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Richard Hayes has decided to retire.

In a Dec. 10 letter to the library trustees and town manager, Hayes said it was time to move on.

"It is time for me to move on to new challenges," he said.

"It is time for you to enjoy the opportunities and ideas and enthusiasm a new library director can bring to your library. As you embark on a new long-range planning process, and as you develop the next phases of information and technology and public library service, it is timely that you engage in new leadership to assist you," Hayes said.

Library trustee Sheila Evans is heading the search committee which includes three other trustees. Town Manager Mark Haddad has the authority to appoint the new director but said he will consider the recommendations of the library trustees.

Trustees chairman Patience Towle said the job is part administrator, part program director.

"It's a good job and I hope we have a lot of applicants," she said.

Hayes, 62, is making about $52,000 and manages four full-time and two part-time staff. The library is open 53 hours a week. The proposed FY99 library operating budget is $307,000 plus $13,400 for capital expenses such as replacing the phone system, buying computer desks and painting.

Towle said trustees don't know what the new director's salary range will be until they see the pool of applicants.

She praised Hayes and said he will be missed.

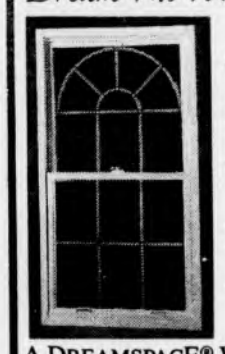
"He brought many hidden talents to the job," she said.

Selectman Merle Brown said Hayes will be a huge loss to the town.

"He is a great person," he said.

Hayes, a Scituate resident, said he has enjoyed his time in Cohasset.

"I've enjoyed my years here," said Hayes in a telephone intervew. "Cohasset is a library supported town.



"It was hard making the decision to leave but there are other things we want to do."

He said both his parents, who are in their 90s, are in good health, so he'd like to spend time with them.

"I may do like Bill Clinton and get a dog," said Hayes, noting that having an animal is difficult when both husband and wife work.

Hayes and his wife, who teaches at South Shore Vo-Tech, may eventually relocate to the Blue Ridge Mountains, which he describes as one of the most beautiful parts of the country.

"We're going to travel and who knows, we may see a nice 20 acres on a side of a mountain we'd like to live on," he said.

WELCOME HOME ALEXIX

There are so many people looking forward to all of the festivities taking place from now until the first of the year — especially those with youngsters who are awaiting Santa and all of those longed-for gifts that he has promised! I can tell you one thing, these children and their anticipation are pale in comparison to the Zerendow family, now let me tell you why! Alexix Zerendow is coming home Dec. 22, after being gone since the beginning of September. After spending all summer learning the Russian language, Alexix left for Moscow where she spent a semester taking all of her classes using the Russian language only! Can you just imagine the stories that she will be able to tell when she returns? Or the experiences that she will remember forever? Hopefully she will be in touch with us to tell us all about her learning experiences! Alexix is a junior at Union College, and a CHS grad.

THANKS TO ALL

Congratulations go to all of the hard workers who helped to make the annual Christmas fair such a big success, everyone had such a fun time and they are still talking about it! It is great to see all of the churches together as one to put on a town-loved event such as that! A true New England event, and if you went by, it looked like a Norman Rockwell scene! We are lucky, aren't we?

SPLENDID HOUSE TOUR

Speaking of hard work that really paid off, the Community Garden Club of Cohasset really outdid themselves last week with their holiday house tour, it was a smashing event that everyone raved about! When I say everyone, I'm not kidding, they sold more than 900 tickets! That is what happens when you build a reputation for being the best at what you are doing — they are and they proved it! You should all be proud of yourselves!

A REAL JEWEL

I received a wonderful catalogue in the mail recently, containing pictures of fine antique and estate jewelry. It was from "Nelson Rarities," located in Portland, Maine, and it is exquisite! After "drooling" over all of the gems, I read the introduction — Nelson Rarities was founded by Andrew Nelson, who as a fine arts major at Harvard University, recognized the beauty and value of antique and estate jewelry. As business increased he recruited fellow Harvard graduate Malcolm Logan and most recently David Johanson. Today Nelson Rarities is known worldwide as a purveyor of rare gems and fine jewelry. If you are wondering why this is being told, did you happen to see a familiar name? Yes, Malcolm Logan! Polly Logan's son! Isn't it great to know that he is doing so well, and is living in Maine! And, wow, do they have beautiful and unique items! Polly would probably fill you in on more details if you are interested, she must be thrilled and proud of Malcolm!

Does anyone know the individual names of players on this Cohasset High baseball team? If so, David Chandler whose uncle, David Franklin Richards is seated next to the post with his glove on, would like to know.

AL LIVINGSTON WILL BE MISSED

It is hard to believe that Al Livingston passed away, he was such a fine man! Even though he had been living in Florida for some time, he was a "Cohassetite" through and through, a handsome man and fine husband, and loyal friend. He will be missed!

PROUD OF NEIGHBOR

We on Red Gate Lane are so proud of our neighbor, Margaux Yeager! Not only is she a fine young lady with a sparkling personality, she made the honor roll for the first semester at CHS. Congratulations to you, Margaux, glad that all of your hard work paid off!

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

A walk on the wild side

About 40 local citizens gave themselves an early Christmas gift on Saturday. They took an hour or so out of their busy lives in the midst of this busy season to meet atop Turkey Hill for a winter walk. The walk was conducted by local conservationist Phil Swanson of Hingham and Katherine Morrison of the Hingham Land Conservation Trust. It was billed as a winter walk in the wilderness and didn't disappoint the hearty bunch who rekindled the spirit by communing with nature.

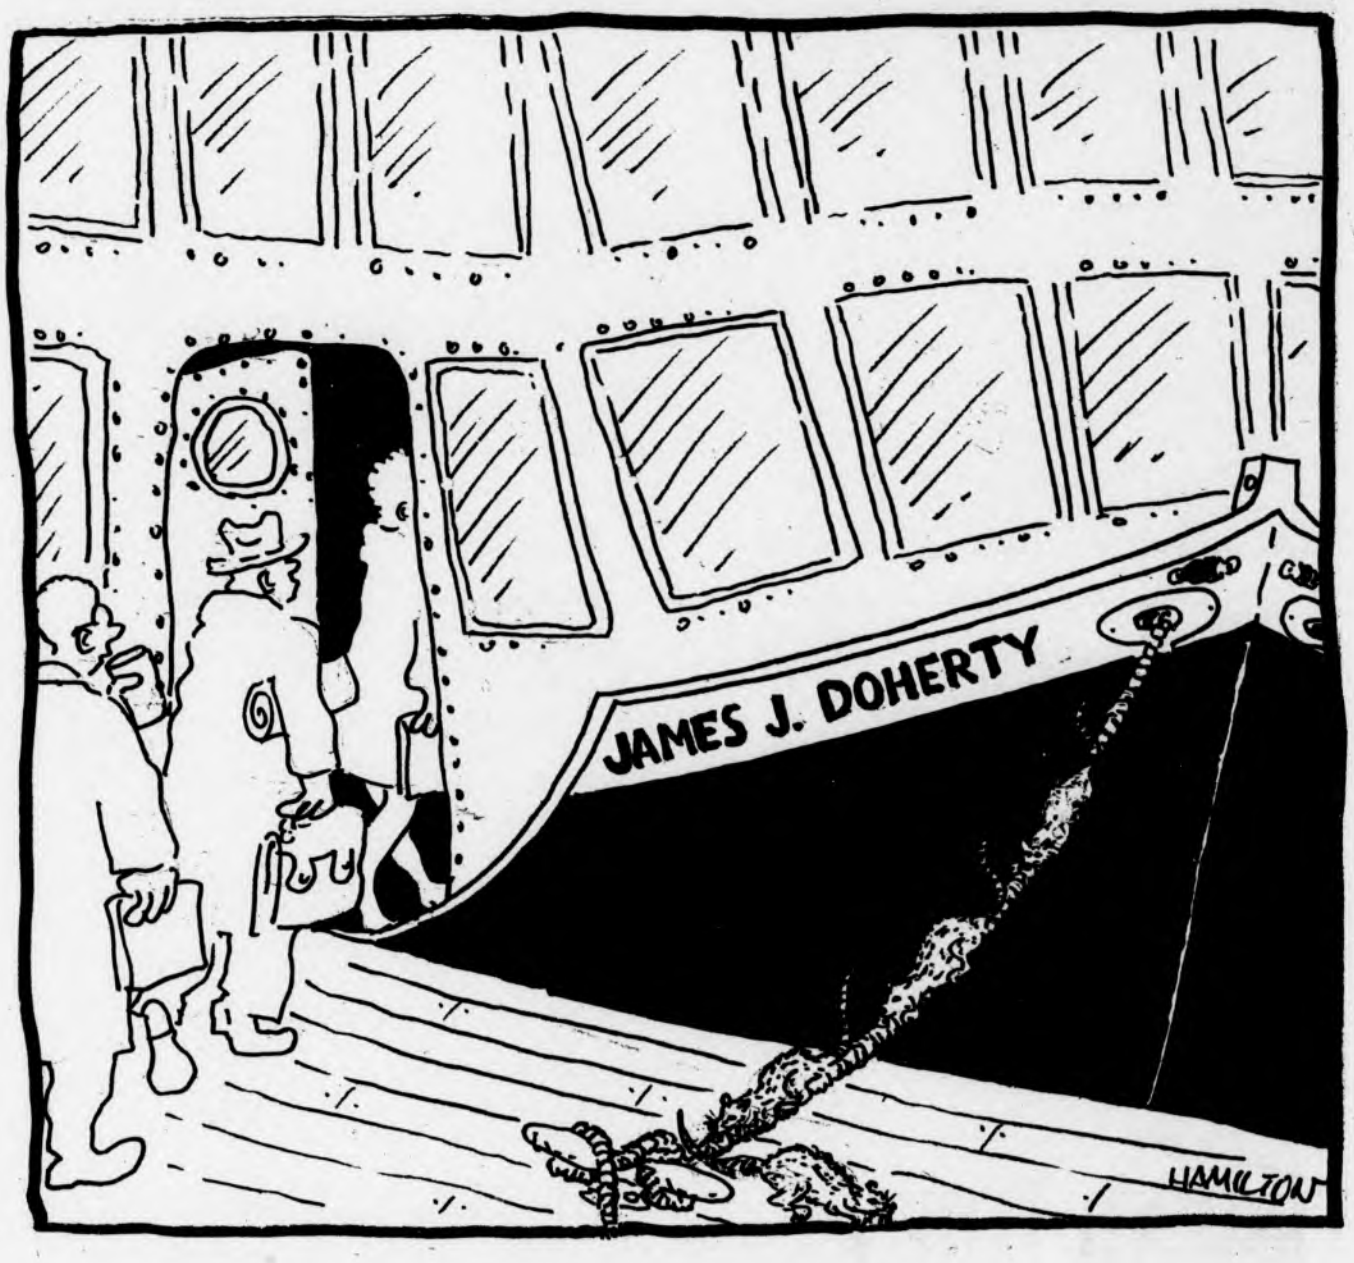
After absorbing the spectacular view of Boston and the North Shore and learning how Turkey Hill, a coastal drumlin was formed by a glacier, we headed down the mile-long Thayer trail where we shared knowledge about flora and fauna, named trees and birds, and even heard a few wild turkey stories.

Richard Rizotto of Hingham talked about the flock of 22 hens and two tom turkeys that arrived in his back yard the day after Thanksgiving.

And Conley Ford of Scituate recalled how his mother boiled the roots of the sassafrass tree to make tea when he grew up in Tennessee.

Ms. Morrison said the walk is great for birders who have reported spotting bobolinks and dozens of bluebirds.

And another woman described her research project with the Cornell Ornithology Lab through which she documented thrushes she observed in the Whitney/Thayer Woods .



The walk took us through the woods into a holly grove, then along an abandoned railroad spur, and finally back up Turkey Hill again.

It was a great way to spend a morning.

As Mr. Swanson said, the best thing about walks are the nice people you meet.

So if you find the stress of the season is too much with you, give yourself a break. And you don't have to wait for the next walk to enjoy Turkey Hill — which opened to the public recently. It costs nothing. Parking is available atop Turkey Hill off Leavitt Street or off Route 3A near the Hingham/Cohasset line.

Worried about 'Buck a Bag'

Dear Mr. Brown:

Have you thought of the elderly in regard to "Buck a Bag"? We do not buy in bulk as the food would go to waste. We keep our trash in small bundles that are easy to handle. Speaking for myself, I recycle religiously, and will continue to do so.

If I have to put all my trash in one bag, I won't be able to lift it. If I use more than one bag a week, it'll cost me about $200 a year, which is a hardship on a fixed income.

Please consider the elderly, and often fragile, sector.

Camille Blain Long
166 Linden Dr.

Smaller bags will be available

Dear Ms. Long:

Sorry I have taken so long to get back to you, time just seems to fly by.

Regarding your question: Has the Recycling Committee thought of the elderly with the "Pay-As-You-Throw trash disposal system? I must answer "Very much so." One of the things Pay-As-You-Throw does is just what it says. You pay for only what you throw away. It is a known fact that the elderly have much less trash than a family of four or more. Therefore, it should cost much less to dispose of their trash.

We have set the program up to allow those who have garbage and can not, or don't choose to compost, to bring garbage in a small-size bag, such as the bag bread comes in, any time the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF) is open without charge. We will be offering two different-size bags; a 30-gallon bag for $1 each, and a 15-gallon bag for $.50 each.

For the first six months of the program we will give a free bag for every bag a person buys. This incentive is to give people time to get familiar with the Pay-As-You-Throw system.

As I sit here writing to you, I have been thinking about what items, other than garbage, is thrown away as trash. Common items that I can readily think of are: tissue paper, plastic wrap (such as wrapped around meats), the plastic tubs butter or margarine comes in (my wife reuses these as storage containers), the absorbent base pads put under wrapped meat, the plastic or wax liners of boxes, paper towels, plastic cap on milk and juice containers, gift wrappings (ribbons, paper, etc.), Q-tips and tooth paste tubes. Less frequently disposed items are light bulbs and broken dishes. There may be more items in the same type of material, but do not have much weight to them.

I have a trash compactor in my kitchen (garbage goes into our composting bin, except for animal products (meat scraps, etc.) which I place in a small plastic bag. It takes about three months to fill the compactor and when filled, it weighs less than 10 pounds. I am not suggesting that everyone go out and buy a compactor; I am merely pointing out that with proper recycling over a three-month period there is not much weight to my trash. However, I would also like to point out that Dick, Leo or George would be more than happy to help anyone who needs a hand with their trash or recylables.

It is very important for people to be aware that it costs $85 a ton to dispose of our trash. Last year we transported around 2,800 tons of trash to Semass. That is a cost of $238,000. That, plus paying the workers, we have a budget of more than $300,000 to operate the RTF.

The Recycling Committee has worked very hard over the years to find a market and a process to recycle all the things we do. We feel we have reached as far as we can. However, if other things do become recyclable in the future, we will be sure to put them on the list.

The Pay-As-You-Throw system is not something new. It is currently working in more than 75 cities and towns in the state and many states throughout the country. Everywhere that the Pay-As-You-Throw system has been put in place, it has reduced the quantity of trash by a large amount. If we could reduce our trash by only 15 percent, it would cut the tonnage from the 2,800 tons down to 2,380 tons; a savings to the town of $35,700. Most people we have talked to in other towns feel this is a very conservative figure even with all the recycling we do.

I have enclosed a flyer the Recycling Committee developed to explain the Pay-As-You-Throw system. We thank you for taking the time to write to us and hope that the above explanation will help you see that Pay-As-You-Throw is the fairest and most equitable way for all of us.

Helping hand with Jingle Bell Walk

To the Editor:

On behalf of the South Shore Community Center, we would like to express our appreciation to the many merchants who lent a helping hand to our Fourth Jingle Bell Walk.

We had a beautiful day, downtown was decorated with red and green balloons, the bells were ringing from St. Stephen's Church, Mr. and Mrs. Claus and helpers arrived at Government Island by boat, and everyone got into the holiday spirit.

This year we added a turkey trot. The winners in the 3- and 4-year-old class were Jay Salerno and Alysa Jacobs; the winners in the 5- to 7-year-old class were Jonathan Wade and Katie Muir; and the winners in the 7- to 10-year-old class were Sam Brigham and Cally Ernst.

Marvels at new field

To the Editor:

During this past year I enjoyed marveling at Cohasset High's new Alumni Field. I recall the old tennis courts, large pot holes flanked by the town's gas pump soon to be a sure eye sore. With a dream, hard work, coupled with financing and many generous donations this area was transformed into a spectacular sporting facility.

At a recent football game, I stood on the visiting team's sideline holding a first down marker. It was at this time a guest coach remarked, "this place is beautiful." How fitting a description on this October evening as autumn's colorful foliage pillowed the stadium. Spectators seated in the stands blended evenly against this colorful landscape. Both teams, coaches, officials and cheerleaders were placed within their respective zones while standing on this carpet of green.

This setting was highlighted by the stadium lights displaying our American flag as the patrons sang the "Star Spangled Banner." This moment captured in the minds of those present surely echoed the statement,

"IF YOU BUILD IT THEY WILL COME"

In closing, Alumni Field is an example of what this town can accomplish. Most importantly, it truly demonstrates our commitment to Cohasset's athletic program which continues to strive on building sound minds and strong bodies.

Citizen of Year nominations due

Nominations are now being accepted for the Cohasset Mariner's Citizen of the Year Award. This is a continuation of the award begun in 1993 to recognize an individual for outstanding service to the community or for a special achievement.

Last year, Cohasset Mariner readers honored the Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for his work with the Appalachia Service Project, an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers.

Once again, the Cohasset Mariner invites our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to our community. This is a community award: The Mariner is the means by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make Cohasset a wonderful place to call our home.

The deadline for nominations for the 1997 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Wednesday, Dec. 31. Please see the nomination form on page 31.

Following the close of nominations, a selection panel will review the names submitted and select the 1997 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January, 1998.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer, or other municipal worker, a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has given freely of his or her time and energy for a worthy Cohasset project or cause. This year's recipient will be the fifth person honored as Citizen of the Year, joining past year recipients:

1993: Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to his community, including chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharisitic minister, usher at St. Anthony's church and more.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the health-care system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little League, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated services as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to get the town sewered. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good in this town through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home repair and home building ministry serving central Applachia.

Stories of victims are told with a purpose

MADD group meets in Quincy

By Robert Ziff
CORRESPONDENT

The Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) Victim Impact Forum at the Quincy City Hospital on Monday, Dec. 15, from 7 to 8 p.m. was held with the hope that if the stories told were enough to stop just one person from driving after drinking, then perhaps their loved ones would not have been killed in vain.

MADD was founded in California in 1980 by Candy Lightner whose daughter Carey was killed while riding her bike to a friend's house by William Busch, a drunk driver. Busch spent less than three months in jail, got out, hit another girl in almost the same location and moved to Wisconsin where he received two additional drunk driving convictions. Today there are more than 400 MADD chapters in the USA including one in Plymouth County, one in Boston and similar programs in Australia, Canada and Great Britain.

Last year during the Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday seasons there were 1,868 alcohol related traffic fatalities in the Unites States. Two out of five Americans are expected to be involved in an alcohol related traffic accident within their lifetime.

MADD's mission is to put an end to drunk driving and help victims of this violent crime. This is accomplished by educating the public by speaking in schools, health fairs, holding candlelight vigils and awareness programs like Red Ribbon Campaigns and KISS, Kids Involved in a Safe Summer. MADD works with legislators to enact better laws that include mandatory minimum sentences for repeat offenders to aid as a deterrent to those that drink and drive.

For the past 15 years, two speakers, Denise and Joe, have been talking at MADD meetings in the area telling their tragic story. On January 21, 1982, Denise and Joe's oldest child and only son, Richard, left their South Shore home and met with his friend, Eddy, who had a paper route. While walking along the roadside they were struck from behind throwing Eddy to the side knocking him into a snow bank while sending Richard sailing 60 feet in front of the car.

The driver was stuck in a snow bank and by the time Eddy approached, the man was trying desperately to dislodge his automobile while putting on a pair of sunglasses to hide his face. Eddy told him that he had hurt his friend very badly but the driver denied hitting anything. Eddy ran to the closest house and called the police. By the time he returned the driver and the car were gone.

Denise arrived at South Shore Hospital to find the doctors giving CPR to her son. His heart had stopped on two occasions on the operating table. By this time her husband, Joe, had arrived from his second job and in the intensive care unit they were allowed to visit with their unconscious son whose head had swollen to twice its normal size.

Denise describes it as if she were in some sort of dream. She was in shock. All she remembers is lights blinking and beeping on the monitors and wires and tubes.

The next day there were no changes and after looking at his CAT scans and brain waves the doctors determined he was brain dead, in a coma with no chance of ever coming out of it.

Five and a half days later Richard's organs failed and he died.

Eddy was taken to the police station where a composite sketch of the driver who had hit them was made. Later that evening the 32-year-old who had previously been through several alcohol programs had driven up on another snow bank in Marshfield. He was arrested for driving while intoxicated and it was found that his blood alcohol level was more than twice the legal limit. He was held overnight and the next morning was identified as the hit and run suspect. After Richard died, he was charged with manslaughter.

"How do you bury your own child?", Denise asks. "It's not the natural order of life."

She describes the wake and funeral as being a nightmare. "I was in total shock and was reacting like a robot. I couldn't even cry and I don't remember too much about it. I felt like the whole world had grinded to a halt."

It took Denise over a year to clean out his room. She was tempted to leave it as it was, turning it into a shrine but knew that was not the solution. What to do with all of his things?

"All I could do for the first year was go through the motions," says Denise. "I didn't even what to get out of bed. I would get up, walk by Richard's room and vomit. It was extreme emotional and physical grief and my marriage with my husband was suffering because of it. One of my daughters started getting sick and acting out and it was determined she was suffering from a delayed reaction to her brother's death. The murder of our son almost destroyed our entire family. It affected everyone."

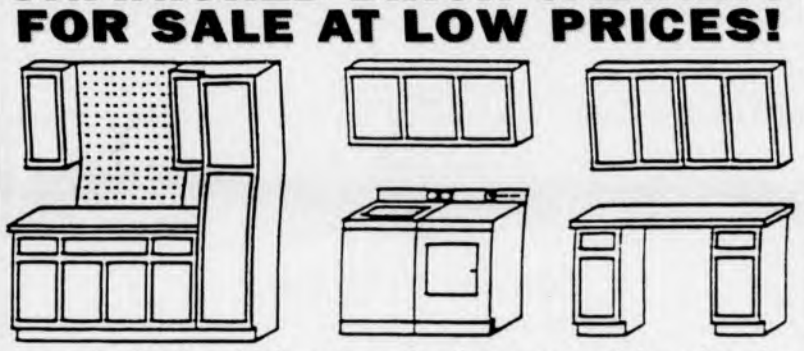
For two years Denise and Joe were called to court and Denise says it was difficult seeing him standing in the corridors, talking with his family and his lawyer and not being able to talk to him, to tell him what he did to their family. He ended up giving up his right to a jury trial and the judge reduced the charge to vehicular homicide and leaving the scene of an accident and sentenced him to two and a half years in prison for each of the two offenses. He was released after doing 30 months.

Besides his son Richard, Joe lost his grandmother and grandfather to a drunk driving accident when he was three.

And when he was 17 fi, his mother and father had driven to Watertown to pick up one of his sisters. At a bar in Watertown his father had a few drinks, or "celebrated" as he liked to call it, before driving home. On the way home they were all killed in a single car accident.

There were nine remaining children in their family who were split up from Watertown to Texas. His aunt, uncle and one of his cousins who were looking after two of his siblings were all killed by a drunken police officer while driving home, bringing the total number of his immediate family who have been killed in alcohol related accidents to nine.

Joe describes his life as containing only 15 years of happiness, the years that his son lived. When his son was in the hospital, Joe said that it felt as though the doctors had reached inside of him and pulled out his will to live. "It was as if I had been thrown into the twilight zone. It destroyed my life. My son and I used to enjoy fishing and other sports and to this day I have a lot of trouble doing anything like that, watching a football or basketball game on TV."



Joe recalled meeting another MADD member by the name of Jim, who at the age of 22 married his high school sweetheart. Now at the age of 27 Jim is a quadriplegic who is only able to move his wheelchair around with controls that he operates with his mouth. His three-year-old daughter is able to climb up the metal frame of the chair onto his lap and ask him when he will be able to get out his chair and play. "It's like living in hell and I'm only thankful that my wife wasn't with me," Jim had said.

The tree that he hit was only three inches in diameter. Jim is expected to live for the next 35 to 40 years in his condition.

If these stories are able to stop one person from drinking and driving then the program is worth it. For information about meeting schedules and membership please call the Plymouth County Chapter of MADD in Kingston at (781) 585-1888.

Health board eyes smokeless town and restaurant and separate ventilation systems.

Yet, according to Susan Cronin of the Tobacco Control Program, similar total smoking bans have succeeded in other Massachusetts cities and towns, such as Brookline, with no adverse impact on the restaurant business. However, the National Restaurant Association has opposed the no-smoking regulations.

"They've done surveys in Brookline," Cronin said. "They did not suffer; 25 percent of the United States smokes, 75 percent of us do not. We've got to think in those terms."

Cronin was before the health board Tuesday to go over the results of her survey on smoking in restaurants. (As reported previously, most people who responded did not believe smoking was an issue. However, the numbers did turn up 29 people — 46 percent of the sample — who confirmed they would go out to eat more often if the establishments were totally smoke-free. The random survey went out to 148 Cohasset residents, and 63 people returned the questionnaire.)

Undoubtedly, if the board goes ahead with the strict new no-smoking rules, it could well have few opponents and might even find the majority of Cohasset restaurant owners and managers lined up in the anti-smoking corner. Meantime, the restaurant professionals will be invited to air their views at an upcoming public hearing.

Under the town's existing restaurant bylaw, Cohasset eateries are required to be 75 percent smoke-free. Many have voluntarily gone 100 percent smoke-free, though some of those establishments, such as Kimball's By the Sea, also maintain smoking lounges where full meals are served and there is no non-smoking section.

The amended law would end that practice and put teeth in the old regulation, with the ultimate goal to stamp out the tobacco habit in all public places, health agent Joseph Godzik said previously.

Finally, both Godzik and Cronin said protecting the health of the people who eat in restaurants is not the primary objective of the anti-smoking measure because the people who suffer most from second-hand smoke are restaurant employees, such as waitresses.

Newtonville sewer hits snag

The thorny problem of establishing sewer service for Newtonville residents has hit a new and unexpected legal snag. According to the health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik Tuesday, a question has now been raised about the legality of putting the residents on the sewer pipeline without an OK from town meeting voters first.

The news put another twist in a tale of frustration for the Newtonville nieghborhood who have been plagued by septic system woes and a bureaucratic Catch-22 since Title V regulations were tightened. This fall, however, they organized and campaigned to get sewers, overcoming resistance from the sewer commissioners who initially said extra customers could have an adverse impact on the wastewater treatment plant's capacity.

But after the health board declared a state of emergency, a compromise was reached to sewer at least four of the houses found to be in Title V failure.

Now, the compromise appears to be in legal jeopardy.

"Town counsel's feeling is this is an extension of the sewer district," Godzik said, and stressed the question hinged on a technicality, since hooking up Newtonville actually would not require a new main or a change in the infrastructure. The area is close to an existing main in Stockbridge Road as well as a new main coming to Atlantic Avenue.

Ironically, Godzik also said, if the Newtonville connection is ultimately deemed to be an extension, the decision could mean a small windfall for the homeowners, since they would be eligible for 50 percent funding for their expenses hooking up to the sewer pipe. Normally, the property owner assumes the whole of the connection cost.

Lights encircle Paragon carousel

The Friends of the Paragon Carousel are again encircled the former Paragon Park Carousel on Nantasket Beach with hundreds of lights in the enduring spirit of winter holiday spirit and in celebration of the continuing effort to keep the Carousel at Nantasket Beach. Begun three years ago as part of the grass-roots effort to keep the Carousel from being auctioned off by its previous owners, the Carousel of Lights will this year extend through Jan. 6, the 12th night of Christmas.

For every $5 donation received during this time period the Friends will light another light bulb on one of the multiple strands of lights which have been strung around the Carousel. As donations grow, so too will the circle of lights around the Carousel until, as in the past two years, the Carousel is completely encircled in lights.

Sponsorship of a light or lights may be made in the donor's name or in the name of a loved one. All donors or honorees will be published in a Carousel Donors list.

In addition to the Carousel of Lights, the Friends have recently launched a major capital campaign to retire the debt incurred when the Friends purchased the Carousel in April of 1996.

Donations should be sent to Friends of the Paragon Carousel "Carousel of Lights," P.O. Box 100, Hull 02045.

Rival commuter boats launch lax safety salvos

T boat threatens rival with lawsuit

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Last week's fire caused momentary sparks in the commuter boat war between the MBTA-subsidized Harbor Cruises —on whose ship the fire occurred — and William Spence's Massachusetts Bay Lines.

But with recent claims and counter claims of safety violations between the two competing carriers, the real blaze continues to smolder below the surface.

"Anyone can have a fire in their house, and anyone can have a fire in their boat," Spence said about the incident last week on a rival vessel where 38 passengers were evacuated safely.

Last July, the MBTA awarded a five-year contract to the low bidder, Harbor Cruises, to operate subsidized commuter boat service from Hingham to Boston. The loser in the bid round, Boston Harbor Commuter Services, subsequently leased two boats to Mass. Bay Lines which hired two BHCS crews and launched the Hingham Commuterboat to compete during peak times with Harbor Cruises.

The competition between the carriers to attract commuters by staying on schedule and through amenities such as airline-style seats has been fierce.

Harbor Cruises recently threatened Mass. Bay Lines with legal action if it doesn't stop running its expanded service from Hewitt's Cove to Boston.

Spence's attorney fired off a reply reminding Harbor Cruises that Mass. Bay Lines' right to operate out of Hingham is guaranteed by an act of the state Legislature.

What really rubs Spence, however, is Harbor Cruises' claim that he is running an unsafe operation.

An attorney for Harbor Cruises, Herman Snyder of the Boston law firm Hinkley, Allen & Snyder, wrote to Spence saying failure of Mass. Bay Lines to cease its "unauthorized" operations will result in serious financial damage to Harbor Cruises and will cause a public safety hazard.

Snyder said the docks at Rowes Wharf and Hewitt's Cove are already congested and Mass. Bay Lines' additional service further congests the docking facilities and adversely affects the safety of the commuting public.

Through his attorneys, Devin & Drohan of Hingham, Spence alleges that Harbor Cruises' vessels collided with each other, hit docks and gangways, have faulty exit doors and break speed limits.

"The point is what happened (fire) Wednesday can happen to anyone's house or boat," Spence said. "But Harbor Cruises has a history of less than desirable maintenance and activity. I am concerned. I don't like to knock neighbors but it's been six months."

Spence also accused a Harbor Cruises vessel of violating a direct Coast Guard command by traveling through the safety zone of an inbound liquefied natural gas tanker, an allegation vigorously denied by Harbor Cruises.

"In our eyes, the Coast Guard is an arbiter on maritime safety issues, not Mass. Bay Lines," said Jane Daly, a partner at Harbor Cruises. "As far as we know, the Coast Guard has no safety issues with us at all."

While the Coast Guard is monitoring commuter boat traffic, a spokesman said there is no evidence on hand to support the allegations.

"So far we haven't found any actionable negligence," said Coast Guard Lt. Richard King.

King said the Coast Guard has people riding the commuter boats at random and even has assigned a special officer to field questions and address specific concerns about commuter boats. The Coast Guard also inspects all commuter boats and passed the John Doherty, the vessel where the fire broke out, in September.

King conceded that the docks are crowded but shouldn't present a safety concern if carriers follow "the rules of the road."

"I've ridden a number of vessels myself and there is some congestion at either end of the run," he said.

But a permanent solution to the crowded dock area at Hewitts Cove, which is in the Hingham Shipyard, may be a while in coming.

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund knows firsthand the docks have been inadequate for some time.

The Weymouth Republican recalled chartering a boat before the increase in commuter boats where the guests, who included elderly citizens, had to climb through one boat to get to another.

"It's cramped down there," Hedlund said.

Hedlund explained the MBTA recently learned the Americans With Disabilities Act may make alterations at the dock more complicated.

"We're talking elevator," Hedlund said.

Also, the T wants to see what the shipyard redevelopment plans are before making improvements and may consider building a new dock dedicated to the subsidized operation.

Hedlund pointed out the two competing commuter boat companies have been slinging mud at each other since June.

"But I don't agree with a lawsuit," he said. "I will use my office to defend Spence's right to operate."

Spence, who has been in business 33 years, insists safety is his first concern.

"It's not sour grapes. I don't know what else to do at this point," he said about what he sees as Harbor Cruises' poor safety record.

"I get a letter telling me how unsafe I am. That just gets ya."

No cause yet for commuter boat fire

A week after the early morning fire on a commuter boat out of Hingham, officials still have no answer on what caused the mishap.

But despite the setback, Harbor Cruises — owner of the vessel where the fire occurred — said the passengers have been understanding and the fire hasn't affected their numbers.

Jane Daly, a partner with the company, said another vessel the Matthew Hughes was called into service to replace the John Doherty where the fire occurred.

"I have been so heartened and buoyed by the response of the passengers," Daly said. "Overall, they were understanding and supportive.

"I've seen the same faces (on board)," she said.

The fire broke out in an engine room of the John Doherty during the 6 a.m. run from Hingham on Dec. 10.

There were no injuries and all 38 passengers were evacuated safely.

Lt. Paul King said passengers the Coast Guard has talked to have painted a good picture of the way the crew handled the situation.

Creative gift ideas for last-minute shoppers

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Though the number of shopping days before the holidays have dwindled, there is plenty of time yet to pick up a few stocking stuffers produced by local artists and craftsmen. Such gifts promise a few of the comforts of home in a small package. Moreover, the price tags should come as something of a relief, especially for harried shoppers with pinched wallets.

For starters, five dollars buys a collectible from a Duxbury studio where artist Phil Fontaine has produced miniature wood models of familiar South Shore landmarks. As might be expected, the Cohasset and Hingham real estate is a little on the dear end of the price scale which tops out at $35. Fontaineís stock includes Cohassetís Red Lion Inn (priced at $12) and First Parish Church, while Hinghamites can pick up a handcrafted replica of the Hingham Congregational Church. (Both churches cost about $18. from S&P Studio at (617) 934-9134.)

Some additional familiar scenes come in the form of Christmas ornaments. Hestia of Marblehead has Cohasset and Hingham scenery in four-inch relief sculptures to be dangled from a Christmas tree or displayed on a stand. (The Cohasset town common is sold at Cards & Shards at (781) 383-6317. Bowl and Board at (781) 749-5451 has a collage of the Hingham harbor. Itís new this year.)

A few Christmas ornaments eclipse the tree and perhaps deserve to stay out on display all year. For one example, a Canton woman, Linda Woodhouse of Enchanted Ornaments sells clear glass balls with unique designs made of dried flowers and "bits and bobs of memorabilia" inside. The 3-1/4 inch ornament retails for $6.95 and can be hung on a tree or on a stand. Woodhouse started the ornaments using flowers from her garden, but she will customize a design per special requests, such as a memento of weddings or showers. Her favorites use flowers, tiny seashells and seed pearls. (Already-made ornaments can be found at McManus Country Gardens on Neponset Street and Creative Happenings, both in Norwood, and The Craft Barn at the Silver City Galleria in Taunton.)

For under five dollars, holiday cooks can stock up on cranberry goodies at the New England Country Cupboard in Weymouth. An 11 oz. jar of the New England Style Cranberry Chutney and the Hot Pepperberry Jelly each sell for $4.50. The store also offers affordable chocolate covered sweetened dried cranberries for noshing after dessert. (New England Country Cupboard on 139 Rockway Street in Weymouth is also at (781) 337-8391.)

Though it might be gilding the lily to serve cranberry food on a handpainted cranberry dish, Ro-Berries of Cohasset offers about every type of China platter, as well as cups, saucers, and cookie jars, with a handpainted cranberry or blueberry motif. Despite the delicate appearance, the products are oven, dishwasher and microwave-safe. (Prices vary depending on the item. Ro-Berriesí merchandise is sold at Painted Daisies in East Sandwich at (508) 375-0713 and at Cape Cod Crafters in Hyannis at (508) 775-1067.)

Since some holiday foodónamely the bagelóhas proved dangerous in slippery fingers, a Canton couple has come up with a safe bagel cutter. Sailing under the logo ìNever fear bagels again,î the company, which is based in Stoughton, sells a bagel slicing board priced under $20. Bergers bagel boards are made of a marble look-alike material dubbed corain. They also can be popped in the dishwasher. The small board retails for $19.95.

This ornament depicting Cohasset Common was created by Hestia Products, Inc. In Marblehead.

If the comforts of home pall after a while, some nearby artists also have goods to sate a taste for the unusual. For something old, Morningstar Studio in Plymouth offers scrimshaw bookmarks made of the recycled top layers of ivory piano keys. For something very new, Bonnie Dulude's business card "bags" (about the size and shape of a business card case) are wearable art that can be strung over a shoulder to dress up a plain jacket, though Dulude also shows them with denim shirts. Dulude's company, Pastiche of North Andover, also produces triangular-shaped amulet purses, made from painted silk and machine-embroidered with metallic thread. The process, she said, is similar to drawing or painting but with a sewing machine instead of a pen or brush. Some of the bags, purses and brooches suggest the Victorian look, but "almost everyone enjoys it," Dulude said. (Pastiche of 303 Pleasant St. is at (508) 686-3243.)

Finally, stressed-out shoppers with $20 left can reward themselves after the holidays are over with aroma therapy. Though not yet Kmart fare, aromatic herbal compresses have been stocked at craft show tables for a couple of years, according to Heather Stambovsky of Springfield who sold some at the Boston Bay Expo earlier this month and said they're good to keeps hands and feet warm. Gram's Little Helper looks like an old-fashioned bean bag in a calico sack and country colors, but it can be popped in the microwave (2 minutes on high) or the freezer for an aromatic heating pad or cold pack. (They're $19.95 a bag from A.W.K. Enterprises, Apple Alley, Milford, PA 18337.)

Skippers begin drive for SSL title

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

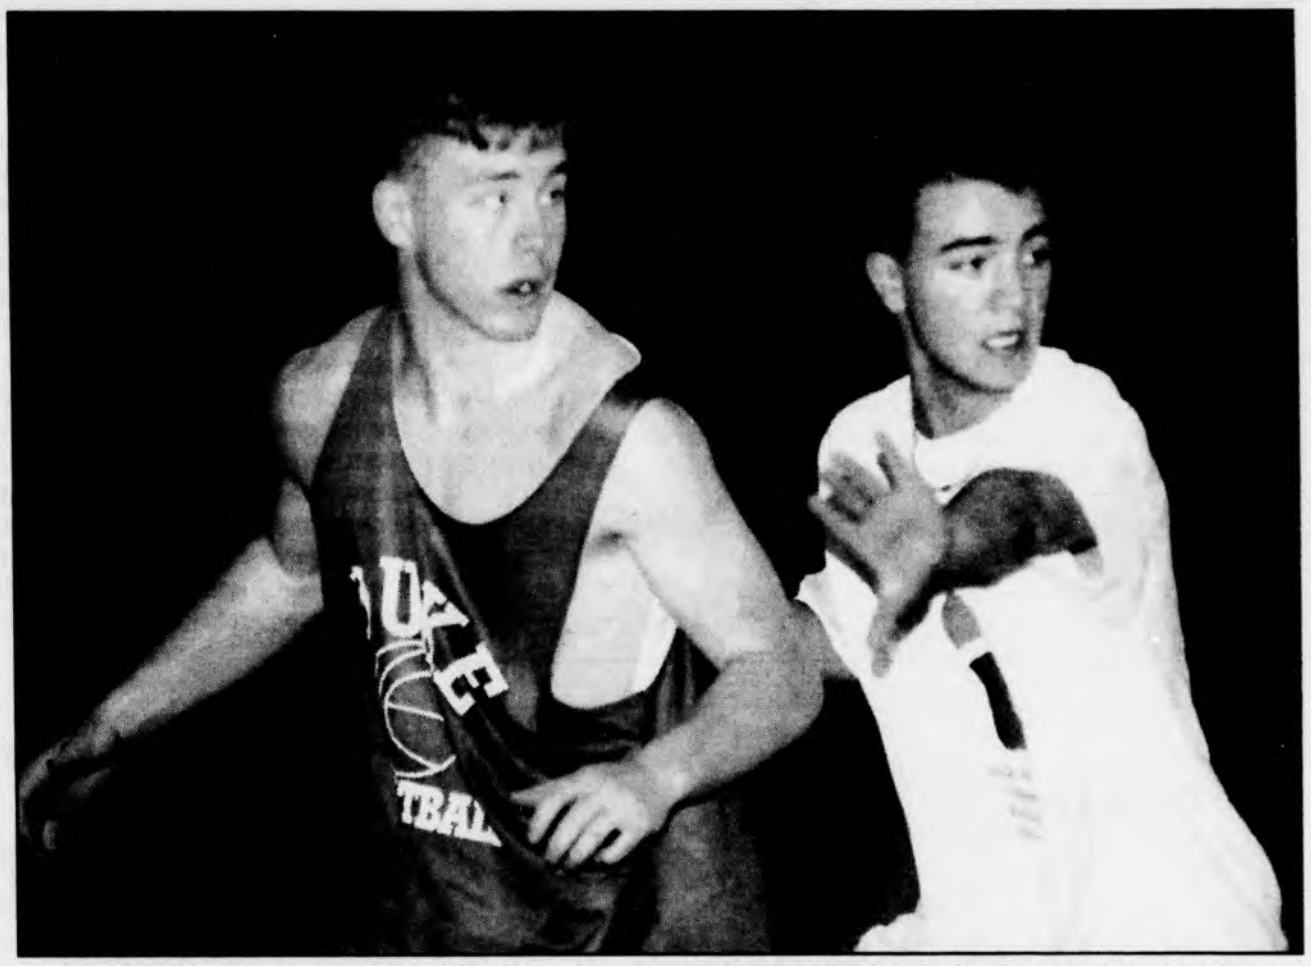
Although last week's report that basketball participation had fallen by 23 players was erroneous, the program has experienced some drop-off. However, that is not to say that the 1997-1998 Cohasset Skippers boys' basketball team will fail to bring another South Shore League banner to the Hot Sullivan Gym.

The team is optimistic about their season. Senior Andy Hamilton said that Cohasset was "looking to go far in the state tournament this year" and promised a "full-court, fast breaking team."

Coach Ron Ford was more restrained about his team's prospects this season.

"If we play hard, we'll be in every game, but we have to overachieve every night we go out there. Paul-Michael Quintin is phenomenal, one of the best players in the league this year. He'll be chasing a thousand points this year, and he'd be the first one we've had since I've been here, maybe the first one since Bryan Edwards."

Ford pointed to Rockland and Carver as the South Shore League's two strongest teams, and placed Cohasset in "the second tier, if all goes well." With a tough schedule, the Skippers will find themselves up against powerhouses like Nauset, Harwich, Dover, Avon and Scituate in non-league action.



It's awfully tempting to draw a parallel between this year's edition of the Boston Celtics and the current boys' varsity basketball squad at Cohasset High. Both teams are defensively talented, with long-range weapons as well. However, even more accurate would be a comparison to the 1995-1996 Kentucky Wildcats. The similarities are many.

Personnel — Both the former NCAA champions and the reigning South Shore League titleholders are comprised of undersized, quick, aggressive players who bring to a game their open-throttle intensity. Tri-captain Pat Hurley's versatile talents, driving skill, and rebounding capabilities are not unlike Wildcats/Celtics forward Antoine Walker.

Tri-captain Paul-Michael Quintin could be compared to Wildcats/Celtics scoring machine Ron Mercer. With an uncanny ability to net three-pointers and an indefensible pull-up jumper, Quintin can light it up, as he did with 38 points and an astonishing 12 rebounds in the season opener.

Hard-working swingman Hamilton will be called upon to hit the boards this year. With a frame hardened by a season playing fullback for the gridiron Skippers, "Hammer" will need to bang down in the post with taller players, and bring his hard-nosed style to the team's pressing defense.

Tri-captain Justin McNamara will play the point in Cohasset's three man backcourt. With a lightning first step, good floor vision, and a beautiful hang-in-the-air-longer-than-you jumper, Mac is a worthy successor to a string of talented point guards who have played under coach Ford.

Justin McNamara covers Andy Hamilton in a practice drill. CHS basketball coach Ron Ford is counting on these two among others to come through with a strong season for the Skippers.

Eric Wenmark is the fifth starter on the squad and also a hard-working swingman. Another rebounder who can drain the trey, Wenmark opened the season's scoring with a triple-double against Norton on Monday.

The team's sixth senior is Raishaun Barboza, who should also be an inside presence. Ford will use the lanky Barboza as a rebounder and to defend the opposing team's big men in the post.

Junior guard Jamie DeMichele is the first man off the bench for the Skippers. Quick as a jackrabbit, DeMichele is superb in the open floor and a remarkable finisher. Also able to fill it from beyond the arc, when DeMichele gets hot, he usually controls the game.

Paul Hussey is another junior guard. Hussey, a transfer from North Quincy High, will see time both on JV and varsity. Armed with a solid jump shot, Hussey should be a pleasant addition to the squad.

Local sports shop owner gets into the holiday spirit

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Pastimes collectibles owner Elliot Goldberg of Cohasset will be making a lot of people happy this holiday season.

Goldberg will be holding a raffle Dec. 24 to decide who will get the chance to buy the new Beanie Baby bear "Princess." The bear, which is purple with a white embroidered rose and satin ribbon around its neck, was created to honor Princess Diana who was killed in a car crash in August.

To make it fair for all his customers, Goldberg is selling raffle tickets for $10 each. Twelve names will then be picked and the winners will be able to purchase a bear for $6. Money from the raffle will be donated to the Jimmy Fund, while a percentage of the Beanie Baby sales are earmarked for the Princess of Wales Memorial Fund.

Stores, Goldberg said, were limited to purchasing just 12 of the Diana bears because Ty, the company which manufactures the hot-selling stuffed animals, didn't get permission to go ahead with the bears until just recently.

For Goldberg, there was no real question which charity he would donate the raffle ticket money to.

"The Jimmy Fund has always been my charity of choice," he said. "I used to go around collecting in my neighborhood in Dorchester as a kid. When I saw there would be a big demand for the bear, I decided to hold the raffle."

Goldberg wanted to avoid having one customer come into the store and possibly buy all 12 of the bears.

Beanie Baby collectors have been known to buy the popular animals by the armload, often shelling out big money for the "retired" collectibles that are no longer being made. Goldberg, though, wants to assure people that everybody will have a fair shot at buying the bear and no exceptions will be made.

"My own wife wants one and I told her I couldn't get her one until the second wave comes in," he said with a laugh.

Goldberg has been selling Beanie Babies for nearly two years and hasn't seen any decline in the product's popularity. "If it's not the number-one toy it has got to be near the top of the list," he said.

He predicts the bear will become hugely popular and has already seen signs that indicate the product is in big demand.

"These bears are in huge demand," he said. "People are already trying to sell them on the Internet for as much as $200."

Goldberg said he was "very surprised" when he heard the Diana bear was being produced but believes it is for a worthy cause. He also likes the opportunity to help out the Jimmy Fund at the same time.

"It's a great organization and it has been for years."

Grapplers gear up for increased competition

By David Wolcott
STAFF WRITER

So, you lead your team to a 16-4 record, finish eighth place in all of Division III and one of your wrestlers, Kevin Duffy, takes the state title in the 135-lb weight class.

What do you do for an encore? According to CHS wrestling coach Torin Sweeney, you schedule tougher opponents and aim for higher goals.

Adding to their growing reputation as the lil' Division III team that could, Sweeney believes that what lies before his squad is one of the toughest schedules in the history of the school's wrestling program.

And he wouldn't have it any other way.

"The only way to get better is to put yourself up against the better teams," said Sweeney. "I didn't want to see the team just sit back and relax after we did as well as we did last season."

If it was a challenge that he wanted to give his team, it looks like he may have succeeded. Opponents for the CHS squad in the upcoming season include six Division I schools and four out of the five top finishers from Division III last year.

Last season the grapplers finished eighth out of the 43 teams that competed in the Division III state finals, their best year since 1993 and the fourth time that they had taken a top ten finish in the 90s.

"I think that if we don't get a top five finish in Division III this

Basketball program needs your help

The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.

Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years.

Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

typical Pitino-style player. Fast, aggressive, and willing to fire up a shot from virtually anywhere inside the Mason-Dixon line, Roine figures to see some solid minutes as an off guard.

Alex "Big Daddy" Russell is the fourth and final junior on the team. Although he is sidelined until after Christmas with an injury suffered while playing tackle on the football team, Big Daddy will bring his bulk into the low post after the holidays and try to wipe the boards clean.

Craig Parker is the team's sole sophomore and also its tallest player. Standing 6' 3", he is a big man who can run the floor and grab rebounds. Around for another two years after this season, "Bacon" should figure largely in the Skippers' plans.

Finally, the team has one freshman, guard Daniel Trowers. Trowers is making the jump from freshman hoops to varsity this year, skipping the junior varsity level. Raw but explosive, Trowers will bring some additional speed to the up tempo style of play employed by Cohasset this year.

Style of play — Without a dominant big man, both Kentucky and Cohasset rebound by a committee and run the fast break. Coach Rick Pitino's style has always been to swarm forward on defense and fall back on offense, his teams often relying on the three pointer, antithetical to the traditional doctrines of falling back of defense and attacking the basket. The Pitino philosophy places a premium on conditioning, as players have to hold up for four quarters of, basically, foul-line to foul-line sprints.

Coach Ford has adopted Pitino's style to fit his team. Lacking the big men which his teams have had for the past five years, Ford has adjusted accordingly. What worked in Kentucky, and what appears to be working for the Skippers.

Head coach — The similarities between the two programs do not end with players and the style of play; the head coaches share a few traits as well. Pitino and Ford are both relatively young men in an old man's business. Both give special attention to their sideline attire and neither would be caught dead with a hair out of place.

Pitino has made a habit out of rescuing teams from the cellar and bringing them to the highest level. He resurrected BU's program, carried a once-dismal Providence team to the Final Four, led the New York Knicks to the verge of the NBA championship, saved a probation-stricken Kentucky program, and has now begun to, hopefully, restore winning as a tradition to the once proud Boston Celtics.

While his resume is not quite as long, Ford has coached the Skippers from a mediocre South Shore League team to within one game of the state finals two years in a row.

His teams contend with the best in the state in non-league tournaments.

As baseball coach, he took the Skippers to the state tournament for the first time in 24 years.

He was also a darn good junior high girls' soccer coach.

And, now, both share the style of play that will get the Skipper-Dome rockin' and leave his exhausted players curled up in the fetal position after each game of fun 'n gun basketball.

year I will be a little bit disappointed," said Sweeney. "This is a strong team but the one thing we have to avoid is injuries. We're not really a deep team, so even one injury could throw everything off."

While only fielding a varsity team this season, Sweeney was excited about the fact that a wrestling team has been put together for kids in the middle school.

"The earlier they learn the basics, the better wrestlers they are going to be," said Sweeney. "A program like this can only be beneficial to their development in the sport."

While the program has been active before, the twist this year is that the squad will have a schedule of seven or eight matches this season against other local squads.

"I think this will continue to be a great feeder program for the varsity team for years to come," said Sweeney.

Hopefully, he added, the younger kids will stick with the team through to the point where they are members of this varsity squad.

"Wrestling is some times a tough sell," said Sweeney. "It's not a glamour sport and there is a lot of work that goes into the training. But once a kid gets hooked in, they almost always stick around and go the distance."

Some of those who have stuck around include the following:

•103 lb. Freshman Craig Sheerin

•112 lb. Freshman Tim Figueirido and sophomore Chris Pratt

•119 lb. Eighth grader Dan Littauer

•125 lb. Junior co-captain Mike Baird

•130 lb. Freshman Dan Duffy

•135 lb. Sophomore Liam O'Donnell

•140 lb. Jordan Fiore

•145 lb. Ben Litteaur

•152 lb. Mike Rossi

•160 lb. Junior Justin Golden

•172 lb. Junior co-captain Luke Caldwell

•189 lb. Sophomore Joe Cardone

•215 lb. J.P. Laugelle

The team does not have a wrestler to fill the heavyweight category.

With no seniors on the team, Sweeney said it will be up to a strong core of juniors to step up and lead this team.

"I'm putting a lot on their shoulders," said Sweeney. "They've been through the ringer before, so they know what to expect during the season and what's going to happen once we get to the state tourney.

"We are young, but I think we've got a strong team to work with this season."

Larson races to the top

Emily Larson, the daughter of Don and Mary Larson of Cohasset, has completed another successful year of showing her horse, Keep in Touch.

Beginning with the Florida circuit, Emily was Children's Hunter Champion competing against some of the best horses in the country.

She continued to be successful throughout the show season, ending it by competing in the Mass. Mini Finals.

Emily rides at River Wind Farm in Pembroke, Mass. Under the instruction of Carl Catani and Abigail Greer.

For Your Health

Take the season's stress out of your holidays!

By Esther Csapo Rastegari, RN, M.Ed.
CORRESPONDENT

Do you feel you have too much to do, and not enough time? Are you getting sick a lot and having problems sleeping? Stress. It's everywhere and everyone is talking about how bad it is for us. In fact, it's one more thing we need to worry about: the stress of stress. It has become somewhat of an umbrella term, primarily referring to anything we don't like that in some way upsets us.

Although we associate stress with an unpleasant event or feeling, many wonderful times in our lives are — at least for our bodies — very stressful: marriage, a new relationship, the birth of a baby. We think of stress as the bane of the modern world, but what about the caveman, out searching for food? Out of the bushes, a few feet away, an enormous animal rears up and roars. Now that's stress! The human needs to make a decision: Does he stay and fight, or flee as fast as his bare feet can take him?

Therein lies the essence of the purpose of stress. It sets off a cascade of physiological sequences to prepare the individual for the task at hand. The adrenaline (epinephrine) is produced and sent throughout the body. His heart rate increases, his breathing becomes faster and more shallow. He becomes more alert, able to smell, hear and see more acutely. Blood is pumped into his muscles to prepare for the physical battle or for the race to safety. Blood is diverted from areas not as important at the time, such as the stomach. It's a great plan if you are truly faced with danger. It is what enables the ordinary person to accomplish extraordinary feats, such as lifting a car off someone trapped underneath. But when the danger is less imminent, such as the boss's reaction to our being late again this week, the stress reaction takes its toll. Our bodies go through the same sequence of events, only to have the body's chemicals raging inside without any way of discharging them. Our body has mustered a defense plan for the imminent attack, only there is no attack. When we are stressed, this preparation of "fight or flight" discussed more than 50 years ago by Dr. Hans Selye, is played out several times a day, every day. The result is physical and psychological disruption, a body that is ill, worn out and exhausted.

The more we learn about stress, the more we understand the role stress plays in making us sick. Virtually all illnesses are made worse through stress, and many diseases are stress-induced (such as high blood pressure). If we can learn to get a better handle on stress, we can be healthier human beings. Sounds great, but how do we accomplish this? Much is in perception. Our feeling of being in control is very much related to stress. When a situation presents itself, if we feel that we are in control of things, there is much less perceived stress than if we feel a victim of the situation. Financial stress, stress in relationships, stress at work, insufficient time, all play a part in our daily lives. We cannot avoid stress, for we cannot control the world around us, but we can learn to manage it differently.

The holiday season is a stressful one for many people. Our regular schedule of work and family/friends commitments is hectic enough. Add to that the additional planning, time and money involved with shopping, wrapping, mailings, trips and family visits... Dealing with stress means learning to set priorities, choosing what you can do something about, and practicing techniques to deal better with those situations over which you have little or no control. Hopefully, some of the following ideas can help reduce your holiday stress, others may need to be placed on your New Year Resolutions List for the next holiday season!

Time. We all have the same number of hours in a day and days in a week, but some of us seem to get more done than others. Time management techniques can benefit us all. Planning is a key factor: Make a list of what you have left to get done before your holiday. Be specific about events you need to attend, who you need to shop for and what to get them. With only about a week left to get everything done for this year's holidays, make a calendar with only the days left on a separate piece of paper. With calendar in hand, write down the events already scheduled, to see what time is still available to you. Decide with family members which events are most important to attend. There is always more going on than we can realistically take part in. Mark your trip to the post office (keeping in mind anything mailed will take several days to get there). Any gift that needs to be sent has a higher priority in terms of being bought than one that will be given out locally. Next year, start marking your calendar early. While it may be too late now for many catalogue or online purchases to arrive in time, think about it for next year. Any gift that can be delivered without your going out to choose it, stand in line to pay for it, wrap it and mail it, has special time-saving advantages. If you have "down time," such as when watching TV, or sitting at the doctor's, or riding the train, use it to write cards, affix postage, or to get more organized. Keep a list of to whom you send cards, so that next year you can address them with return address early on and write them as you have time. If you have a number of people to whom you send detailed letters to catch up on the year's events, consider a "newsletter" of sorts, in which you write all the news you would share with everyone. This can be inserted into the card, which you can then personalize. If you have a computer, you can even have a file started early in the year, in which you write about important events as they happen and are up-to-date by the time the 1998 holiday season rolls around.

Finances. Financial stress is certainly year-round for many people. The holidays can add to that. This is when a budget is really important. Decide on what you can afford — without paying for it for the next 12 months! Include the cost of wrapping and mailing gifts, as well as additional entertaining costs. Even regular household costs are increased with extra usage of electricity and gas. From the whom-to-buy-for list you already generated under "time management," decide how much you can afford to spend on each gift. Homemade gifts are always welcomed for their thoughtfulness and personal touch. Remind yourself of the true meaning of the holidays, which sometimes can get lost in the hectic nature of the season. A box of seashells sent to a friend as a reminder of long walks taken together by the beach will mean far more than an expensive store-bought present.

Stress-reducing techniques. Stress takes its toll on our bodies, and we respond by tensing our muscles, taking short, shallow breaths and being prepared to fend off a mighty beast. If you already engage in regular exercise, this is not the time to slack off, for this is when you need it most.

Exercise allows our bodies to "let off steam" in a physical way. While time is of the essence right now, try to squeeze in a few minutes several times a day to get up and take a brief walk. If at home, get out and walk around the block, taking in deep breaths as you go. If indoors because of work or weather, get up and walk up and down a flight of stairs, or even around the office, doing some deep breathing as you go. Just a five-minute break can help to clear your head, refresh you a little and make you more productive. Even if you stay seated, stop working periodically. Breathe in through your nose, imagine filling your stomach with air. Imagine the air bringing energy to every cell in your body. Exhale through your mouth, pulling your stomach towards your back. To take a mini-vacation, close your eyes and imagine yourself somewhere beautiful. See what is around you. Taking a deep breath, smell the air, the trees or the flowers. Listen for sounds of the wind, or the ocean, or birds chirping. Touch the flowers, feel the sand in-between your toes. Using as many of your senses as possible in your imagined location helps the relaxation process.

Meditation is another good tool to help you relax. Sit comfortably in a place where you won't be disturbed for about 15 minutes. Close your eyes and pay attention to your breathing. It will probably be shallow and a bit fast. Take a few deep breaths — breathing in through your nose, filling your abdomen with air, then slowly letting the air out through your mouth and gently pulling your stomach toward your back. Pick a letter of the alphabet and start to repeat it to yourself over and over. As thoughts enter your head, gently push them aside by returning to saying your letter. It takes awhile to get the hang of it, as we are so used to thinking about something. It is hard to think of nothing, and yet remain focused. When you feel ready, stop saying your letter, but keep your eyes closed and take a few more deep breaths. They should come a bit more naturally at this point. Slowly open your eyes and readjust to your surroundings. Gradually get up from your seated position.

When practiced on a daily basis, the benefits of the meditation and relaxation help to lower blood pressure and counteract the damage to the cardiovascular and immune systems being done by stress.

We can use our senses of smell, touch, and hearing to help reduce our stress. Aromatherapy uses the scents of essential oils such as lavender, geranium and sandalwood to bring about a feeling of relaxation.

A book on aromatherapy along with a small basket of essential oils make a thoughtful gift for a friend or for yourself!

Touch is a basic need of all human beings. Massage has been found to be not only very relaxing, but healing as well. Massaging your feet with scented lotion can be a way of taking care of yourself during this hectic season, as well as throughout the year. Listening to soft, peaceful music is also very relaxing; a personal favorite: "When it's time for letting go: music to heal the heart" (Serenity). Music without a regular beat or that is unfamiliar can be very soothing, as it allows the mind to relax a bit more.

Those New Year's Resolutions

- I will buy a weekly planner and start being more organized.
- I will actually use my weekly planner.
- I will learn to say "no" to requests made of me if saying "yes" means not doing a good job and feeling overwhelmed.
- I will plan my time so as not to always feel rushed.
- I will try relaxing exercise like yoga (The American Yoga Association Beginner's Manual is a terrific at-home, pace-yourself yoga guide of 30 weeks of "classes" that virtually anyone, no matter how out-of-shape, can start with week 1, and stay there as long as needed). Of course, classes with instructors are good, too!
- Taking care of myself doesn't mean thinking only of myself. It includes getting enough rest, eating food my body needs when my body needs it, and engaging in relaxation activities so that I can feel my best to do what I have to do.

There is no place like home, and we prove it 24 hours/day, 7 days/week, 365 days/year.

Registration for junior lacrosse scheduled for Dec. 20

Registration for the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse spring season will be held Saturday, Dec. 20, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

The Junior Lacrosse program, starting its third year, is open to boys and girls currently in the fifth- and sixth-grade. Registration is $75, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids.

The Cohasset junior lacrosse program is part of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program. In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices currently are scheduled for late afternoon Mondays and Fridays. The team will begin practicing in early March, games start in April and the season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree in mid-June.

"We do realize that conflicts come up," says Jaffe. "That's not a problem so long as a kid can be there often enough to learn our offense and defense, and is responsible in telling us when he can't attend practices or games. "

Lacrosse is a contact sport; both practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass. Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey equipment is allowed, although Jaffe warns that hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick.

Because of the popularity of the program, there is a strong possibility that Cohasset will field two teams this spring. "If 36 kids sign up — and we had 30 last year — we definitely will have two teams this spring," says coach Chuck Jaffe. "We appear to have coaches lined up to help us grow the program, which will really help our players develop. The kids will get more repetitions in practice and, with two teams, a lot more playing time. That just makes the games more fun."

Jaffe also notes that while the team welcomes girls, it does not play girls' lacrosse, which is not full contact, is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment. "There are many girls playing in the MBYLL," he said, "but they do have an adjustment to make when they get older and start playing girls' lacrosse."

There will be more information on the Cohasset Junior Lacrosse program available at the Dec. 20 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

Blue Hills snowboard lessons

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept a limited number of registrations for Blue Hills snowboard lessons for children ages 10 through 18.

Registration will be held at the recreation office Thursday, Dec. 18, from 5 to 6:30 p.m.

The cost for five 1 3/4 hour lessons and transportation is $160 per person which includes board rental for the five-week session. Should boots also have to be rented, the fee is $175 for the five-week session.

This program begins Thursday, Jan. 8. Bus leaves town hall at 3:20 p.m. and returns to town hall at about 6:45 p.m.

Call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-6791 with any questions.

Rowers compete in New England championships

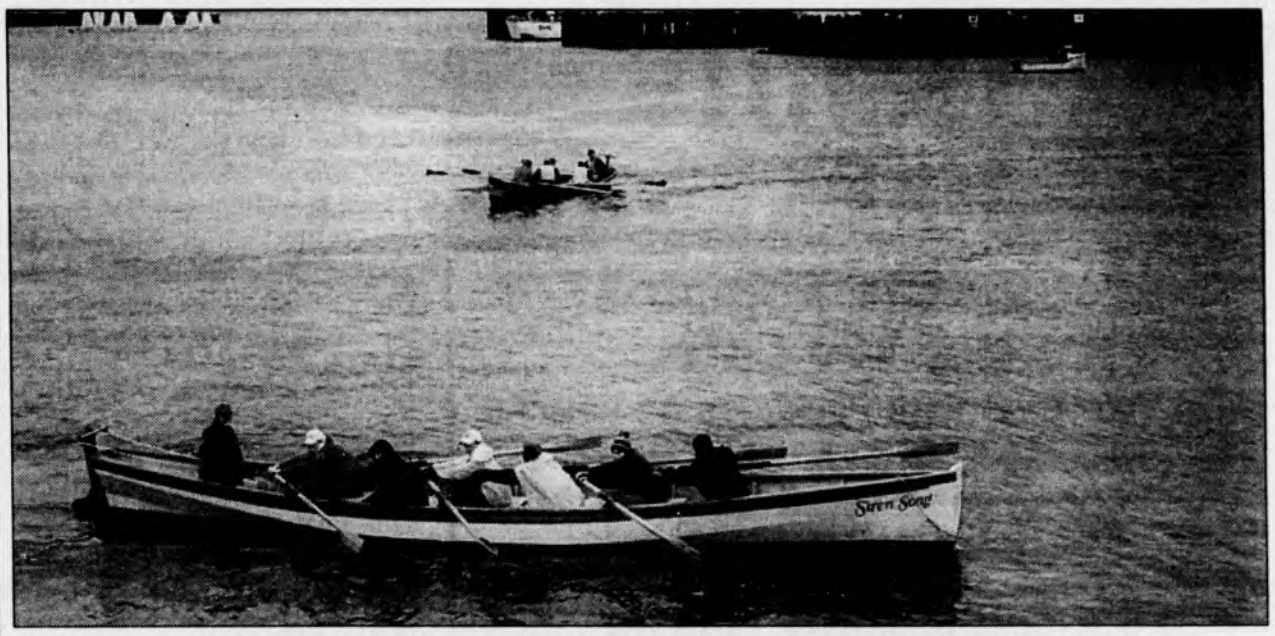
Cold temperatures, freezing rain and snow showers couldn't dampen the enthusiasm and spirits of a group of Cohasset students who participated in the annual "Icebreaker New England Rowing Championships," held in Boston last month.

These Cohasset High School students comprise the Cohasset Open Water Rowing Team, coached by Cohasset High School teacher Jack Buckley of Hull.

Under Mr. Buckley's direction, these students row three afternoons per week for up to 11 months each year. The year culminates with the "Icebreaker Championship," when teams from Maine, New York, Connecticut, Boston, Charlestown, Hull, Hingham and Cohasset compete in about 12 sprints.

Team members rotate in groups of six rowers and a coxswain through the sprint events. All teams rotate using several English-made "Seilly Isle Pilot Gigs" as assigned by the race committee.

This year, the Cohasset rowers competed in four sprints finishing third overall.



The team was also scheduled to compete in the Nautical Mile Sprint. This last event was canceled due to the inclement weather.

Cohasset Rowers participating in the Icebreaker this year included: Seniors: Janet Hoyler and Justin Green; Sophomores: Jen Barnes, Mareth Collins-Wooley, Liz Hassen, Lindy Morde, Matt Pilczak, Joe Nicynski and Brian Tracey; and, Freshman Elizabeth "Bea" Rankin.

Each rower was awarded the "Key to the Harbor" and a T-shirt. Congratulations to this committed group of young people and their coach for their dedication to rowing and their commitment to keeping the Maritime History of Cohasset alive!

The Icebreaker Championships are organized and sponsored by the Hull Lifesaving Museum.

Feb. 7, 1998, the Cohasset Open Water Rowing Team will sponsor a "Row-a-thon" to raise money to purchase two "Concept II" Ergometers to enhance their training.

DRUG FACTS

"...Listen to your kids. Communicate with them. Set a good example by not doing drugs yourselves. The drug-use epidemic can be blamed on public indifference, lack of information and most of all parental indifference...Most people don't want to know about it. It'll go away. IT AIN'T GOING TO GO AWAY! Parents should be ashamed of their ignorance about drugs. They (the kids) won't respect you if you don't know what's going on ..."

— From a talk given to Cohasset parents in the late '80s by David Toma, the former undercover detective from Newark, who inspired the television series "Baretta."

Young Annie actors upbeat about upcoming show

By Mary Sheppard Earon
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Katie Roche, 11, gave up winter sports this year to play Annie.

Brian Krupczak, 14, rehearses for his role as Daddy Warbucks in the upcoming Cohasset Plays by the Sea production of 'Annie.'

Brian Krupczak, 14, of Aaron River Road, enjoys playing running back on the Cohasset High School football team. He says that "even though the team hasn't had a lot of wins lately, we're still a good team and we'll be back."

This sense of team spirit and optimism carries into his attitude about another team he plays with — the Cohasset Plays By the Sea Drama Club cast and crew of "Annie."

Cast as Daddy Warbucks, Brian feels confident that the production rehearsals will produce good performances of "Annie" next month when it goes on stage at Cohasset High School.

"When the leads rehearse, it feels professional. Everyone knows what they have to do, and they basically get down and do it. Pretty straight forward. The little kids get rambunctious though, and then it has to get strict, but otherwise, it's going pretty fast. Good group of actors."

Brian's football and basketball schedules have been a challenge to balance with the "Annie" rehearsals, but since he's been involved in drama on and off while growing up, balancing it all is something that Brian takes in stride.

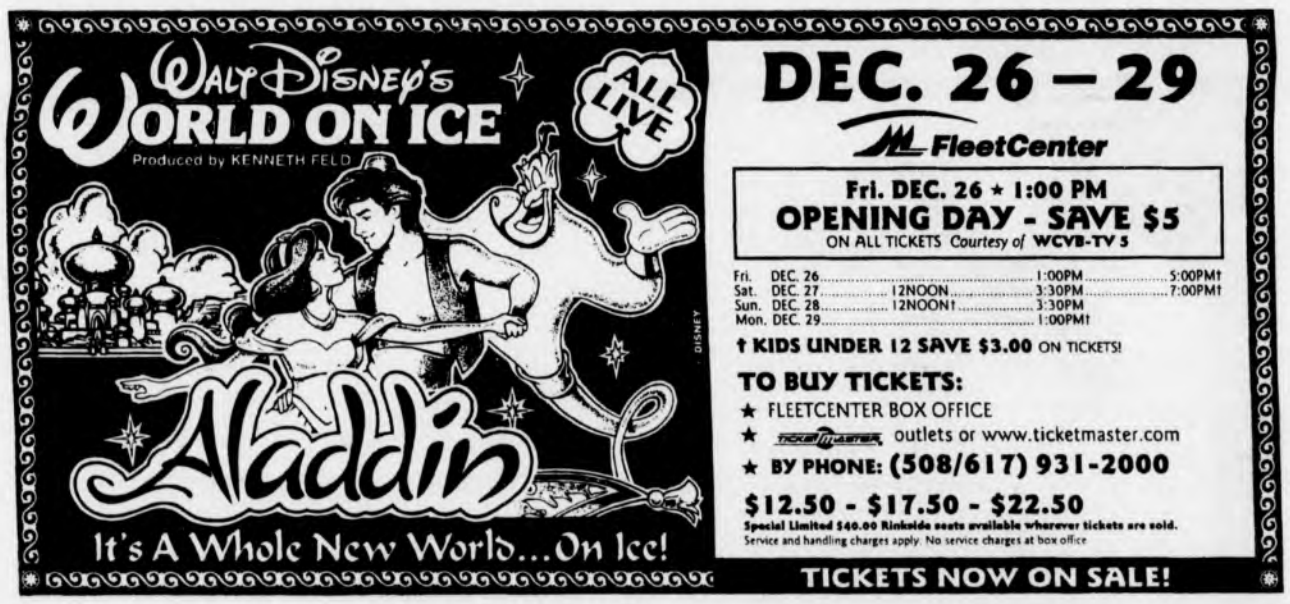
"I like acting. I was in the summer production of 'Once Upon A Time' this past year when Ronnie (Nicynski) approached me and asked me to audition for 'Daddy Warbucks.' I told him about my football schedule and he agreed to work around it with me if I joined the production."

Brian enjoys playing serious roles as opposed to those with humor.

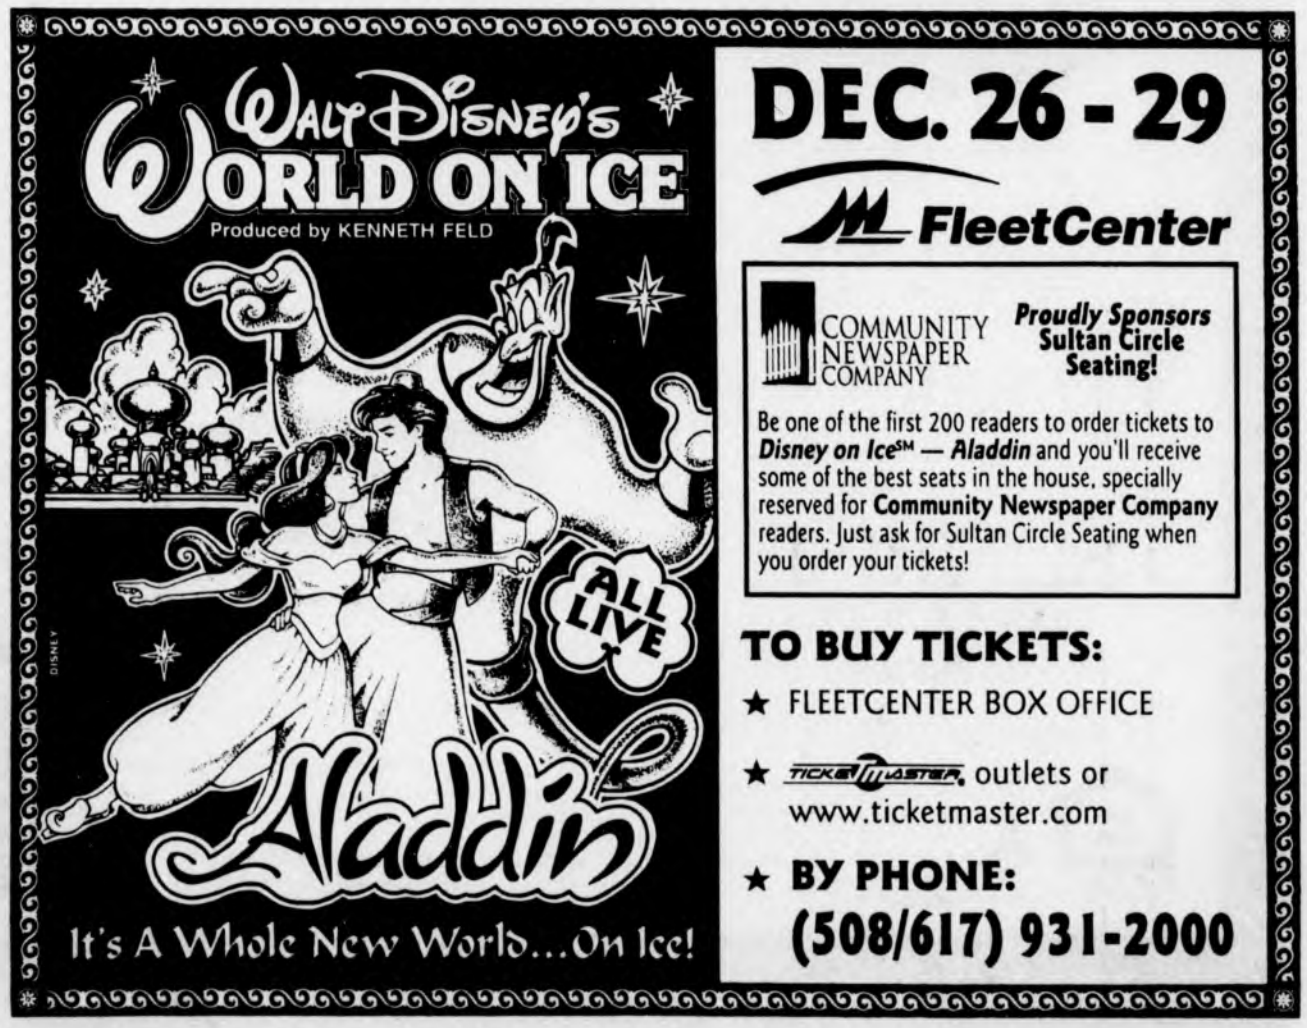
"I think I'm personally more of a serious person. I like the character of Daddy Warbucks because he's big, rich, powerful and demands respect."

Brian said that director Ron Nicynski makes them analyze their characters in order to help them ease into them.

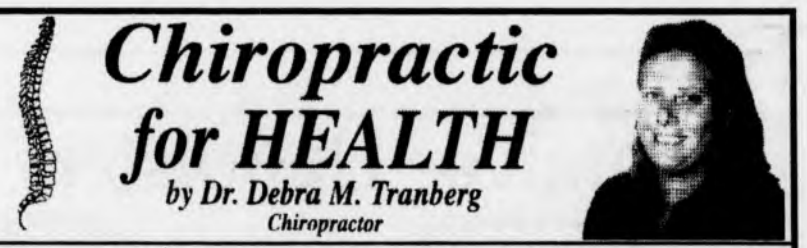
"Warbucks is a Republican. That is forefront in my mind when I am rehearsing my entrance, exit and lines."



Brian Krupczak was also in the chorus of "Mikado," a Cohasset High School production last year.



"I believe they're planning on producing it again next year and if that's so, I'll try out again for it. It was very well done. "



Brian's advice to others thinking about getting involved in drama is to be prepared to sacrifice your time.

"It's worth it, though," he added. "You learn a lot and it's a

Picking up old trees

The Drug and Alcohol Committee is sponsoring a fund-raiser to benefit the proposed teen garage. On Saturday, Jan. 3, and Saturday, Jan. 10, a group of adult and teen volunteers will be available to pick up and dispose of your Christmas tree. The fee for this service is $10 per tree, $5 for senior citizens. Just put your tree next to your driveway, place a check payable to the Drug and Alcohol Committee on your door, and they will dispose of your tree.

To order service, call 383-2552, available 24 hours. Please specify which Saturday you prefer. For more information, call Wallace St. John at 383-2627 or Jami Butman at 383-9435.

Please help children in need

Until Dec. 23, C.H.S. will have a toy drive. The toys collected will be donated to the Toys for Tots, Mary Martha's Learning Center and Rosie's Place. Any unwrapped gifts are greatly appreciated. Please bring them to the main entrance of C.H.S.

Auditions for Neil Simon play

Hull Performing Arts is proud to announce auditions for "They're Playing Our Song" book by Neil Simon, music by Marvin Hamlisch and lyrics by Carole Bayer Sager. The show will be directed by David Clinton and the musical director is Derelyn Kahler.

The original cast of "They're Playing Our Song" included Robert Klein and Lucie Arnaz in her Broadway debut. This romantic musical tells the story of Vernon Gersch, a composer, and Sonia Walsh, a lyricist. The two team up to write love songs. In order to learn more about each other, they go to dinner and begin to fall in love. But Sonia has an old relationship to work out...

Vernon's and Sonia's alter egos are acted out by other characters on the stage. Their thoughts and feelings are played out by these characters so that we learn the inner workings of the hearts and minds.

David Clinton will be directing "They're Playing Our Song." Clinton has appeared in many HPA productions including "Two by Two," "A Thurber Carnival," and "I Take This Man." In 1994, he made his directorial debut with "1959 Pink Thunderbird," in which he directed Lone Star. Clinton has also acted as musician, stage manager and set hand. He is the president of Hull Performing Arts and a longtime member of the HPA Board of Directors.

Auditions will be held Monday, Jan. 12, and Wednesday, Jan. 14, 7:30 p.m., at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave. in Hull. Please bring a prepared piece of music (doesn't have to be from the show). Call (617) 925-9086 for directions and other information.

Hull Performing Arts is a nonprofit, tax-exempt community theater based in the beautiful seaside Town of Hull.

Consignment shop for the holidays

Cashmere men's sweaters, Scottish tweed jackets, designer party dresses, Royal Copenhagen Christmas plates, and a Victorian Wedgwood cameo necklace are among the treasures at the Cohasset Consignment Shop, Shaw's Plaza, Route 3A, Cohasset.

South Shore shoppers can avoid the traffic and holiday crowds and come to the new shop Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., and Sunday, noon to 5 p.m., manager Andy Merrill announced.

Collectors will want to view Royal Copenhagen Christmas plates 1964-1985, English village Wade England of weighted porcelain, Reed & Barton tea service and tray, Ralph Lauren sweaters, designer jewelry including Victorian Wedgwood cameo necklace, sterling silver pins, bracelets and earrings as well as an eclectic collection of cookbooks, glassware, scarves, hand-knit mittens, fur jackets and mink coats.

Shoppers will find treasures and bargains but more importantly will help support a variety of programs offered by the Social Service League, which has served Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset since its founding in 1912.

For information on volunteering or consigning, call manager Andy Merrill at 383-0687.

lot of fun."

Katie Roche, cast as Annie, agrees.

Katie is learning a great deal in rehearsal. She said it takes up a lot of time, but "nothing is ever accomplished in a week, if it's going to be good."

Wise words coming from an 11-year-old seventh-grader.

"I gave up my winter sport to be in Annie, but I don't feel bad about that because playing Annie is not an opportunity I'll have every year. I can always play winter sports."

The role of Annie was tough in the beginning for Katie because she wasn't familiar with the character. She now considers the character a part of her life, a part of herself for as long as she plays the part.

Katie, who lives on Black Horse Lane, moved to Cohasset from England when she was 8 years old. She said she's been acting "her whole life."

"I was in the production 'Cats' and 'Beauty and the Beast.' I was also a munchkin in the CPBS production last year of "The Wizard of Oz."

Katie said that she had hoped for a larger role than munchkin last year, but in the end, was glad her role was a smaller one.

"Having a big role is a lot of work and I really didn't want to do it last year."

Katie said this year it's different. Doing the work is not something she has minded, she said. She was ready.

Katie was also quick to praise director Ron Nicynski.

"Ronnie isn't like any other director I've worked with. He helps you by not telling you exactly what to do. You have to figure that out for yourself," she said, "and that's cool."

Katie's other interests are horses, singing, dancing, and field hockey, her fall sport.

Her advice to kids thinking about trying drama? "Try hard," she said.

Vivaldi 'Gloria' at First Parish

The inspiring music of Vivaldi's "Gloria" will be performed in its entirety, using full orchestra, in First Parish Meeting House on the Common Sunday, Dec. 21, at 10:30 a.m.. The senior choirs from the First Parish in Cohasset Unitarian Universalist and the Second Parish in Hingham Unitarian Universalist will be accompanied by the Hingham High School Chamber Players. The chorus numbers close to 45 singers in an exciting new approach to the holiday season by both congregations. The program was presented at Second Parish Sunday, Dec. 14.

The players, under the direction of Jane Hallet of Hingham, numbers 16 highly-trained string players. In addition to strings, the "Gloria" is scored for continuo and oboe. The cello continuo part will be played by Elizabeth Olson of Hingham, and the oboe parts by Sally Davenport of Hingham. Soloists for the performances are all members of their respective choirs, and include: Dorothy Pitt and Elizabeth Morrell of the Hingham Parish, and from First Parish, Jean Scammell, Diana Rousseau, Jane Forrer, Mary Ann Cushing and Anny Newman. Organist is Mark Slawson of Second Parish, and the conductor, Carolyn Curtis of First Parish. The public is invited to attend.

Christmas worship at St. Stephen's

Fredrick Guzasky, will offer music such as "Hallelujah, Amen," by Handel, and "The Snow Lay on the Ground," by Leo Sowerby. The traditional story from the Gospel of Luke is read from the King James Bible. Candlelight illuminates the singing of "Silent Night." The beautiful bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas into the night.

Worship on Christmas Day will be at 10 a.m. Sunday morning worship as usual is at 8 and 10 a.m.

Some question if school budget makes the grade

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

Town Manager Mark Haddad defended his budget Monday in the face of school board criticism he has not done enough for education.

Haddad said he earmarked a $469,000 increase for education, and the total amounts to more than 70 percent of all the revenues from new growth.

ìI think I put together a sound budget that meets the needs of the town and does not ask the taxpayers to vote for an override,î Haddad said, although he agreed the school board could still ask the selectmen and the town meeting to lift the tax levy limit.

On Thursday, at the school board meeting, the calls for a tax levy override to build up the school departmentís war chest rang out after high school principal Curtis Collins all but doubledared the school board to show leadership and go for a Proposition 2 1/2 override of the tax levy this year. The proposed school department budget is $8.06 million, a 4.9 percent hike over last yearís.

"There's no shame in losing a battle, but there is a shame in not taking up a battle," the principal said.

Collins was before the school committee to detail how $113,000 in budget cuts at the high school would be felt in the classrooms and on the playing fields during the next fiscal year (FY99).

The principal lamented the need for the belt-tightening measures in something of a watershed year when the staff was trying to "nurture" the new middle school and begin block scheduling there. At the high school, he said, teachers would be grappling with a new social studies curriculum and the first year of the "high stakes" tests Massachusetts students must now pass to earn a diploma.

Cohasset Council on Aging to receive grant

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, announced recently that the Executive Office of Elder Affairs will soon be mailing a grant award notice to the Cohasset Council on Aging. Preliminary figures for this grant award were released earlier this year, however, during the legislative process, funding was increased for the Councils on Aging. This increased has made available $3.70 per elder, with an available minimum of $2,000 regardless of community size.

Sen. Hedlund has worked to secure funding for the Councils on Aging in all eight towns within his district. The Cohasset Council on Aging will receive a grant in the amount of $5,002 for the purposes of employing a part-time Nutrition Site Manager, expanding outreach activities and producing a brochure and funding dues. "The Cohasset Council on Aging is an important part of the community. This grant will do much to improve the services and resources of this organization," Hedlund said.

Christmas past

A Brownie camera was the best present of all

By Joel Pratt
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Cohasset in the 1940s was beautiful. It is beautiful today as well, but it is not the same. Then towering Elm trees ringed the Common and marched down Elm and South Main Streets. There were even some right in the center of the village. It was smaller then, with less cars and houses and people than today. While many kids had grandparents, aunts, uncles and cousins living nearby, few had as many as did I and my Pratt cousins. The extended Pratt — Bates clan was so large that there are still relatives I haven't met.

Daily life was far different in Cohasset in 1947, when I was nine. There were no shopping centers on 3A. Many things came right to our door. White Brothers delivered eggs, milk, butter and cheese. Arnold Erickson raised poultry on his farm on North Main Street and delivered it in his old pickup truck. If you put their cardboard "G" sign in the window, the Gentile's bakery truck would stop with bread, rolls, cupcakes and donuts. The cleaners took pop's soiled shirts and brought them back starched and ironed. Timmy, an old Irishman, lugged canned goods and other groceries into the kitchen from his SS Pierce truck in wonderful collapsible boxes which folded flat when empty. Lincoln Brothers delivered coal to the bin in the basement and the Williams Brothers took away our trash. Doctor Howe made house calls. Everything else we might need could be found in the stores in the village, a short walk from our house on Stevens Lane.

There were very few TVs in 1947. Computers, video games, wireless phones and satellites were the stuff of science fiction. We had comic books, 78 RPM records and AM radio. And we had the outdoors: we hiked to all corners of the town without concern. And people did things together back then. That year, Marion Winsor started a marionette club for kids. Nine or 10 of us made puppets from balsa, cardboard, cloth and paint, then put on shows. We even got our pictures in the Boston papers! My parents joined the Cohasset Dramatic Club: Pop worked on sets and mother on costumes. Pop and a group of his friends worked many evenings at the old Community Center at North Main and Sohier Streets building row boats designed by Dwight Simpson, a Cohasset resident and marine architect.

February brought the biggest snowstorm of my life — and a family tragedy. Great Uncle Lot Bates was a fireman: blizzard or none, he had to get to his shift at the old fire station at Cohasset Harbor. The Beechwood Street crossing tender — there were no automatic signals back then — wasn't there. Lot's car arrived at the crossing at the same instant as the Boston train: it was pushed all the way to Cohasset Station.

Back then, you had to be nine to be a Cub Scout. My birthday present in March was a cub uniform, bought at Sidney Gates' store. Well, part of one. I got a blue cap and shirt and a yellow neckerchief. None of the kids in our den had uniform pants — we just wore dungarees.

In October, the Fire Department showed off its new 1947 Pirsch ladder truck. I watched as pop climbed to the top of the 50-foot ladder. When he got down, he announced to Chief Oliver that he would never again get that far off the ground in a machine. And he never did.

1947 moved inevitably towards its end — and Christmas. A chemistry set was at the top of my list. When our presents were opened on Christmas morning, no chemistry set was among them. Mother said, "Ask your father." Pop said, "You're too young." OK, so no chemistry set. There were other neat gifts though. Electric switches for my train set, a Cub Scout flashlight and ice skates that fit. The skates had my cousin Russell's name in them: for years skates moved from one Pratt family to another as feet grew. Our childless neighbors, the Eatons, gave me another wonderful gift: a "Moto Saw" hand-held jigsaw.

Best of all was a small present which I treasure even now, 50 years later. Our parents gave my sister and I Kodak Brownie cameras.

Today, nine-year-olds routinely use their family's videocams and computerized 35 mm cameras with built-in flashes. Our black-and-white Brownie cameras would look ridiculous to them. No batteries. No electronics. No blinking lights. No color pictures. These were the original point-and-shoot camera: the Brownie had knobs to advance and rewind the film and a button to take the picture. Period. But in 1947, it was an awesome gift. For, you see, my parents didn't own a camera of any kind. Now my sister and I could take pictures and they could not.

Each Brownie came with a roll of Kodak V127 film and a tiny instruction booklet. Operation was simple. There were three don'ts: don't take pictures when it is too dark; don't take pictures when it is too bright and don't take pictures of things that are too close. I wanted to start taking pictures right then and there. Pop said, "Learn to load the film, then you can take my picture." And we did. My first picture shows a very cold pop standing by the back steps with his hands in his pockets.

Joel's first picture: Pop Pratt on Christmas morning, 1947.

Later that day, we went to Aunt Edna's house on the Common. There we discovered that our cousins Russell and Sheldon had also been given Brownies. In fact Uncle Carroll had bought them in Boston for all of us. Soon we kids were told to go outside to play. We took our cameras with us. But what to photograph? We decided to take pictures of each other. I took a picture of Russel. Then Russell took my picture. Then I took Sheldon's picture. Then Sheldon took my picture. Then I took one of Russell and Sheldon. We each took a picture of the flagpole on the Common. And one of the Common pond. To advance the film, you watched the little red window on the back and stopped winding when the next number appeared. Each roll had only eight pictures and they were going fast. When the last picture was taken, you had to rewind the film, remove the camera back and then lick the stickum on the paper tab so it would keep the film from unwinding.

Operation was simple. There were three don'ts: don't take pictures when it is too dark; don't take pictures when it is too bright and don't take pictures of things that are too close.

The day after Christmas I walked to Calls Drugstore to leave my first film to be developed and to buy a new roll. Wow! A roll of film cost almost a buck! Two days later the first pictures were ready and I learned the next hard lesson about cameras. It cost about 2 bucks a roll for the prints! My 15 cents a week allowance wasn't going to support much of a photography habit.

That simple camera lasted many years. Where is it now? I have no idea. But the Brownie and I took many pictures of Cohasset and Cohasset people. I still have every one of them. The camera is gone but the images of my family and the beautiful town where I grew up are with me still to share and enjoy.

Beechwood Street culvert must be replaced

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Every day hundreds of vehicles travel over the Beechwood Street culvert carrying residents to various destinations, from home to work and any place in between. But a recent inspection by the Massachusetts Highway Department revealed that the Beechwood Street culvert is in such poor shape that it should be replaced as soon as possible.

Town officials are racing to secure state funding to pay for a new culvert. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the cost of a new culvert is estimated at about $350,000.

Haddad said he is hopeful that the state will pay that entire cost.

The most important thing for the town to do to secure funding is to get the culvert listed with the Massachusetts Area Planning Council's (MAPC) Transportation Improvement Program (TIP).

"Getting the culvert listed with the TIP puts it in the pipeline for funding," Haddad said. "The legislature will not even act on a project unless it is listed with the TIP and approved by the Massachusetts Highway Department."

The town must also have the bridge rated by a professional bridge engineer. But in a letter to Mass. Highway, Haddad asked the state to rate the bridge because the town has no money to hire a private inspector.

Haddad said the TIP approval is "pretty well secured," and Mass Highway is considering the project.

State inspectors found heavy corrosion in the corrugated steel pipe arch portion which is used to reinforce the overall strength of the culvert. The roof of the granite slab, which is the part on which cars travel, shows signs of significant settling.

Currently, the culvert can remain open unless it deteriorates further. Haddad said the town is trying to avoid shutting down the culvert, and part of Beechwood Street, thus avoiding a traffic nightmare.

"Beechwood Street is very important, and shutting it down would be a big problem," Haddad said.

State inspectors found heavy corrosion in the corrugated steel pipe arch portion which is used to reinforce the overall strength of the culvert. The roof of the granite slab, which is the part on which cars travel, shows signs of significant settling.

The Beechwood Street culvert highlights a larger problem with bridges across the state.

Many bridges in Massachusetts aren't in very good shape. Approximately one of every six bridges in the state is in such poor shape that it should be repaired, replaced or placed under load restrictions, according to the Federal Highway Administration.

Cohasset is fortunate to have only three bridges, all listed in good shape by state inspectors: Lincoln Street on the Scituate line; Atlantic Avenue, about one-mile north of Beech Street; and Border Street near The Chart House restaurant.

The state does not maintain any of the bridges in Cohasset; all are maintained by the town's highway department.

In contrast, many towns on the South Shore have far more bridges, such as Canton with 33.

But many culverts are not considered to be bridges, and are not listed on the state's inventory.

The state defines bridges as any structure with a span of 20 feet or more. Culverts are smaller structures that span gaps and are generally used to channel water.

In addition, culverts are box structures that have bottoms while bridges are spans with no bottom.

The state bridge repair program provides towns with financial assistance to repair deteriorating bridges, but it must be listed with the state to qualify for funding. This can create some technical problems for culverts, which do not meet the state definition of a bridge.

Funding, however, is available for culverts on the TIP list and approved by Mass. Highway.

State bridge inspectors regularly check local and state controlled structures to help towns avoid expensive inspections and to ensure the safety of the public.

There are more than 4,600 bridges in the state's 351 communities. State inspectors have identified 700 bridges that are structurally deficient. Of those, 260 drew the lowest possible rating from state inspectors.

Fixing all of the state's bridges is an astronomically expensive undertaking. Repairing or replacing all the structurally deficient bridges in the state would cost approximately $1.8 billion, according to state bridge inspectors.

Acting Governor Paul Cellucci is attempting to cope with the problem. Cellucci recently signed a bill that authorizes the state to borrow up to $3.9 billion to repair improve roads and bridges.

The money will be a boon to local communities that own bridges but don't have the funds to make repairs.

"They often don't have the resources to fix their bridges," said Alex Bardow, the state's top bridge engineer. "We try to assist them."

State traffic planners believe that the state will repair or replace all structurally deficient bridges within the next 15 years.

"I truly believe we can eliminate the structurally deficient bridges," Bardow said. "We're using better materials that will last a longer. The commitment is there."

Committee member McElroy takes stand for override

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

If the schools are getting short changed in this year's spending package, don't bet the newest member of the school board Joseph McElroy is about to coo like a dove. Thursday, McElroy showed something of a hawkish stance as he nipped town officials for not putting enough money in the budget for education spending.

In fact, McElroy was out in favor of an override, if necessary, to shore up flagging school programs and stop projected cuts in athletics.

The school board will take a vote on the budget at the next meeting Jan. 8.

Meantime, McElroy's aggressive pitch for more education spending came as a bit of a surprise since at a previous school board meeting recently he appeared ready to challenge the size of teacher salary increases.

At that time, he noted some teachers will bank 8 and 10 percent raises this year, not the 3.5 percent raise called for in the new union contract, and he asked if no one seemed to be looking at the automatic pay increases educators are awarded as they log more years in the school system and climb up the salary schedule (dubbed 'steps').

But Thursday, McElroy appeared to back off his earlier comments and sounded critical of the Town Manager and the selectmen, instead.

"I havenÕt heard anyone on the school committee suggest the increases"(in teacher salaries) "were out of line," he said .

McElroy spoke up after school committee secretary Ralph Kidder and superintendent Stephen Hart said some recent comments about significant increases in teacher's salaries were misleading. (Both stopped short of naming a source for the statements.)

According to the superintendent, salaries do account for 80 percent of the school department's budget. Though this year's education spending package of $8 million represents an increase over the previous year, the whole 4.9 percent is eaten up in the salary line.

"Obviously, we cannot run the same level-service budget, due to salaries," Hart concluded.

Moreover, Kidder also acknowledged this particular teacher's union contract was going to have a long-term impact on the school budget, as McElroy surmised, though he defended the deal the school board negotiated. He noted the salary increase included hiring new teachers as well as raises for the other teachers.

"At the time we negotiated the teacher's contract," Kidder said, "It was made clear to us the town was going to seek an override." But the override never materialized, Kidder said.

Later, McElroy revisited the salary question and implied town officials were not willing to take a fresh look at the school board's predicament.

"The selectmen and particularly the Town Manager have already positioned themselves in a corner," McElroy charged.

McElroy also said Haddad is not going to support an override and is not willing to build up education spending.

Moreover, the school board's new man charged Haddad, the selectmen and the Advisory Committee all failed to add up the increases spelled out in the current teacher union contract before they came up with a target for this year's education spending package.

Haddad, in an interview Monday said McElroy was right when he said the Town Manager would not back an override but wrong when he blamed the selectmen and the Advisory Committee for the calculations.

"Mr. McElroy has to understand this is the Town Manager's budget," Haddad said. "The selectmen and the Advisory Committee have had no input."

As McElroy teetered on the edge of predicting an unavoidable confrontation between the town and school sides of government over education spending, committee chairwoman Maureen Jerz attempted to draw the discussion to a close. It was then ten oÕclock, and the budget had eaten up more than two hours of the meeting's attention.

Nonetheless, McElroy waved off the Chairwoman's call to move on with the next agenda item and said he was prepared to stay until midnight to "set the tone" for the upcoming budget negotiation since time was running out.

But Jerz said the school board was close to striking a deal with the Town Manager, at least to help pay for this fiscal year's overrun.

"WeÕve got a pretty good discussion going," said Jerz to characterize her talks with Haddad.

McElroy appeared unimpressed. While Jerz glanced up at the ceiling, he went on talking for another 10 minutes, raising questions, challenging figures and "playing devilÕs advocate" over the need for elective courses such as photography. He said he wanted all the arguments and all the figures to be Òunassailable" when the school leadership answered principal Collins" "call to arms," as McElroy out it.

"We ought to go for more money than the guidelines that the Town Manager established,"McElroy said finally. "If that means an override, so be it. I'm as pro-education as anybody sitting up here."

Some question if school budget makes the grade

Athletics also was subjected to the budget pinch, with some high school sports likely to be discontinued in FY99. Freshmen boys basketball and girls softball are probably out, but some new programs, such as girls lacrosse, will be replacements.

Though overall the axe fell mostly on the high school budget, and not the middle school, Collins said the younger students' sports program would be cut, too. The principal lopped $18,000 off middle school sports, ending the cheerleaders, girls softball, and ice hockey. Collins also eliminated one soccer and one basketball team, thus effectively dismantling the "no team-cuts" policy, new this year at the middle school. The policy meant every youngster who came out for a team was assured of a berth. According to instructor Ronald Ford , perhaps 50 to 75 percent of the 105 student athletes this year would not have played a sport if making the team had been competitive.

Superintendent ordered cuts

Collins said the $113,000 was sliced out of the school budgets to get down to "the number," a reference to the total $4 million the schools superintendent earmarked for the high school. The bottom line, according to schools superintendent Stephen Hart, shows the school funding will not be enough to pay the operating costs even this year, even though the Town Manager has been ready to help the schools with an unexpected $280,000 in costs, primarily for special education tuitions.

Better than 30 people packed the Audio/Visual room inside Cohasset High to hear the details of the budget situation.

Guest house septic decision sets precedent

Fallout from septic districts not a factor, panel says

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

The health board in a recent meeting seemed to be grappling with a dilemma over a question about a new septic system for a guest house.

The request from Gammons Road homeowner William Earon asked the board to rubber stamp a plan to build a new septic system just for a bathroom in his garage. (The new septic system on the drawing board was to be separate from an existing one connected to his main residence.) But though the health board had approved such separate arrangements before, it had not done so recently. In fact, such a situation had not come before its consideration since Title 5 regulations were tightened.

Moreover, approval, if it came, would have to surmount opposition from Earon's neighbors and their lawyer.

> "This was part of a much bigger picture. Every homeowner in Cohasset has to understand how valuable their percable land is."
> — HEALTH BOARD CHAIRMAN, ALIX WHITE.

It didn't happen. Instead, the application was withdrawn without prejudice, and the homeowner was advised to go through with a confidential Title 5 inspection of the septic system connected to his main house.

Though on the surface, the complications appeared to be due at least in part to a dispute between the neighbors, health board members said they saw it as something different. Specifically, Chairwoman Alix White said the health board had to anticipate the problems Earon would face, if the septic system connected to his main residence ever failed and if there proved to be no more land left to install a new septic system after the separate system for the garage was installed. So much land in Cohasset is either ledge or clay, White added, there often may be very little room to put a septic system, even on a large lot.

"This was part of a much bigger picture," White said in an interview this weekend. "Every homeowner in Cohasset has to understand how valuable their percable land is."

During the deliberations, White also referred to some misperceptions about two controversial new septic system districts which the state somewhat forced on roughly 130 homeowners, as part of the settlement of a legal judgment against Cohasset. Gammons Road, White said, escaped being included in the special district "by a whisper." Ultimately, Earon found his garage was standing in the long shadow cast by a controversial new environmentally sensitive district nearby.

Nonetheless, the Chairwoman also said the decision would actually benefit Earon. She also said even though the property in question was not officially part of the special district, it probably should have been.

"It's really important to understand this decision" (about which land to include in the special district) "was not based on science but on politics," White said. "It would have been much better and fairer to establish a town-wide policy."

Officially, though the sewer commissioners negotiated the settlement that included the two special districts, the health panel is charged with implementing two environmentally sensitive areas. Both have proved unpopular with residents who feel they have been forced into a perpetual cycle of costly septic system inspections and potentially astronomical repair bills. Last Tuesday, apparently cautioned by the strong tide of public opposition, White suggested the health board would have to do more from now on to explain why they were cautious on the installation of new septic systems in areas that also were environmentally sensitive, but not officially part of the new district.

White also said she was aware of the financial stress on homeowners in the new districts. The Chairwoman was expected to meet Monday with officials from the state Environmental Protection Agency to apply for a grant to finance homeowners' repairs inside the high-priority district.

Though the decision to hold up the approval was a precedent, as health board member Kevin Ulmer acknowledged and would apply to other guest houses in the future, it was overall consistent with the board's policies. The board has consistently been concerned about environmentally sensitive areas, Ulmer said.

After a long discussion and a fruitless search for similar decisions reached after the new Title 5 regulations went into effect, the board clung to a plan to put a hold on the new septic system for the garage pending a Title 5 inspection of the existing system for the main house. Since the property is outside the special district, the homeowner would not be mandated to make repairs if the system failed Title 5.

"I'm not sure I'm being treated all that great here," Earon said, after the board considered an earlier motion that might have required the homeowner to upgrade his existing system if it failed Title 5. "Can we not make any motions?"

Finally, Earon's case was not the only time Tuesday the fallout from the new districts appeared to be something a factor in the health board's deliberations. A proposal from John McNabb of Stop Any Further Expansion (of the Cohasset Heights Landfill) to simplify a town bylaw met a comment from health board member Kevin Ulmer on the public's perception that the new districts could have stood a little more "explaining."

McNabb's amendment, which would have to get an OK from town meeting, would allow the health board to publish summaries of Title 5 legal notices rather than spell out the whole. Ulmer said the summary might be an issue since the homeowners who are in the septic system districts indicated previously through their lawyer they might challenge a town meeting vote which had been based on a similar summary account in the town meeting warrant. The vote was to adopt the two special districts, but the question put before the town meeting allegedly failed to delineate where the special districts were to be located.

Social Awareness Group gathers Toys for Tots

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

For Cohasset High student Josh Flannagan, 18, the holiday spirit has a bit of an Appalachian flavor this year.

Josh joined a number of students over the summer on a trip to Tennessee with the Appalachia Service Project. The youngsters call it ìdoing Appalachia,î and the experience, though it only lasted a week, appeared to have made a difference to Josh. After he came back home and realized he was still reaping the benefits from the experience, he was hooked on helping others enough to join the schoolís Social Awareness Group.

This holiday, Josh was among several students who found a ìmini-Appalachiaî through the toy drive sponsored by the outreach group and the student council.

ìItís kind of interesting to see how other people live,î he said about the summer job when he helped rebuild a deck for a Campbell County family that had few resources. While the volunteers labored in the heat, they talked with the children, and the mother made homemade lemonade for everyone.

ìYou get to know the families real well,î Josh said.

Thursday, as the hours left before the holidays melted down, Josh and some other members of the Cohasset High Social Awareness Group kept the personal touch in the toy drive as they got busy on the cards that will go with those presents. (The club is a student outreach group that promotes awareness of social issues ranging from Amnesty International to charitable organizations).

The scissors were passed around the library table like breadsticks, and the work was speedy and mostly quiet. Tom Leahy, 18, had the tube of glue in one fist and the colored construction paper on the table as he produced a well-designed card with an abstract tree.

He joined the toy drive detail because ìit comforts others,î he said.

ìEveryone has some kind of trouble in their life,î he said. ìBut people can help each other. Itís kind of a unique experience to be part of.î

The Social Awareness Group, spearheaded by Megan Connolly, 17, collected $50 at lunch Thursday to shop for toys, and unwrapped new presents could be dropped off at the school up until Tuesday. The toys will go to needy youngsters at the Mary Martha Learning Center in Hingham and Rosieís Place in Boston. The effort has a presence at the school as well as support from the staff and students. On a walk through the halls of Cohasset High this week, it would be hard to overlook the glittering posters that heralded the toy campaign.

ìThere are kids that canít get anything for Christmas,î said Jenny Chastain who said she didnít ask for any presents for herself this year but thought the toy drive was important.

Though most of the group thought it was too obvious why it was important to help, many repeated a similar point of view.

They are lucky to live in Cohasset, they said.

They are lucky to go to a good high school and be part of good and loving families.

Everybody doesn't have it that good.

LUMINARY ON BEECHWOOD

Florence Jerome wants everyone to know about a beautiful and simple way to observe Christmas Eve, simply take a drive up Beechwood Street! At that time the families bordering on Beechwood Street from Route 3A to Bound Brook will set up their Fourth Annual Neighborhood Luminary. Luminaries are a festive and beautiful Christmas tradition dating back hundreds of years. Candles are lit in small paper bags and placed outdoors along the sidewalk (or on top of the snow) for a beautiful, simple way to spread the light of Christmas. Tradition has it that the lights symbolize a new beginning, but children like to think of them as runway lights for Santa's reindeer. The luminary will be set up at 5 p.m. Christmas Eve, and will continue late into the night until the candles burn out; in the event of inclement weather, it will be the 25th, Christmas night. Not only does the event draw the residents and their guests out of their homes while setting up the lights, but many passers-by stop to chat and exclaim how the illumination, so still and quiet in the night, makes that religious evening so memorable. Mark it on your calendar now and plan to take a ride to "see the lights."

DOMINIC SESTITO ARRIVES!

Another legend has been born in Cohasset, his name is Dominic Carl Sestito! Dominic is the son of Lilly and Joe Sestito, and the baby brother of Joey Sestito! He was born Nov. 24 at 6:50 p.m. — he weighed in at a mighty 8 pounds 13 ounces! Domenic's maternal grandparents are Joe and Paolina Carbone, his paternal grandparents are Tony and Judy Sestito. With all of these Cohasset relatives, rest assured that you will be seeing Dominic "around town" often! Our congratulations go to all of you, here's to a happy, healthy (and hectic) Christmas!

MAY I PRESENT

Sallyann Chatterton

Many people begin the New Year by serving pork roast, it is a tradition. Through the ages pork has been one of man's favorite foods! It is flavorful, cost-effective and has much of the same nutritional value as beef. Pork takes longer to cook (it must be well done), but the end result is certainly worth it! For a different recipe try this, it tastes even better than it looks (colorful and unique).

"Drunk" Roast Pork

3 medium carrots
2-1/2 lbs. boned center pork loin
2 tbsp. brandy
1-1/2 cups dry red wine
1/8 tsp. ground nutmeg
2 bay leaves
1 tsp. salt, pepper
1. Cut carrots into 1/2-inch sticks

2. Pierce meat in several places at both ends of the pork roll with sharp knife, 1 inch apart. Stuff a stick in each hole.

3. Dust pork with flour. Heat oil in Dutch oven and brown all over.

4. Add brandy. Simmer 1 minute. Add wine, nutmeg, bay leaves, salt and pepper. Add additional wine, if necessary, so pork is nearly covered.

5. Bring to boil, lower heat; cover. Cook for about 2-1/2 hours, turning occasionally, until pork is tender.

6. Remove pork to warm platter; remove string. Cut pork into thin slices. This dish serves six people.

EDITORIALS & OPINIONS

Closed on Christmas

When did the mall start staying open until 11 p.m. Saturday night only to open up again Sunday at 8 a.m. during the holiday season?

Supermarkets are open around the clock.

This must of happened when we weren't looking.

How many remember the days when shopping was restricted to "normal" working hours and Saturdays, except perhaps for a Thursday night or two before Christmas?

Sundays — even in December — were days when we stayed home after church because nothing was open.

Now with so many mothers and fathers working — shops have extended their hours to accommodate our schedules.

We're not complaining. We took advantage of those extra hours and may not have been able to finish our shopping without that flexibility.

A walk through the mall at 10:45 p.m. on Saturday night was amazing. It was alive with people ranging from the harried shopper to the young couple out for an evening.

But gratefully for all of us — just about everything is closed on Christmas.

That means, you, I and all the shopkeepers and workers out there will have a well-deserved day off. Many of us will be hard at work cooking and acting as host to relatives — but at least, we'll be home or at someone else's home.

Christmas is one of the few holidays left when there's almost nothing to do except being together.

For at least a day, the world stops for a while and we get off our treadmills and out of our offices and back into our homes with our families.

Let's keep it that way.

Merry Christmas!

Hiring consultant for super search possible

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

As the hunt for a new school superintendent recently got underway, the school board faced up to an important question.

Who should be at the head of the search party?

A consultant would be a good choice, according to school committee secretary Ralph Kidder. Kidder, also the head of the search sub-committee, said Thursday in his view, a paid adviser could serve as an extra set of eyes for the board.

Though ultimately, the final decision on the new chief rests with the five members of the school panel, Kidder said the consultant's main role would be to study the school board's marching orders, then dig through the pile of resumes and flag the best candidates vying for the post. Moreover, since time is short, the extra help could keep the search moving forward, with the goal to thin out the field to the top eight or 10 hopefuls, Kidder said.

So far, three consultants have been recruited for the scouting role, and at least one of them has expressed interest. At their next session January 8, the board is set to hear a proposal from James Hardy of the state association of school committees. (Hardy has told Kidder he would have sufficient time to guide the district through a successful search, if the board has a spec ready by February. The two others consultants have not yet committed.)

The Cohasset school panel is expected to vote on the consultant question after the presentations.

Meantime, work on the new superintendent's profile, dubbed the "spec," was to continue this week with the teacher's association weighing in at a Monday forum.

More forums to hear the public's views start in January after the educators go on the record with their opinions about the challenges that will face the new superintendent and the qualities the leader of the district will need. After the forums wind up, a screening panel will be formed to include representatives from the community. That group will be charged with interviewing the eight to 10 finalists.

The school board is looking for a new chief to replace Superintendent Stephen Hart. Hart is stepping down in July.

As the Cohasset Social Service League celebrates its 85th anniversary, several past presidents gathered in front of the Lilac House, which served as headquarters for the League from 1975-1981, for this photo for the League archives. L-R are Annette Sawchuk (1994-95), Mary Hartwell (1990-91), Ginny Riley (1984-87 & 1992-93), Helen Hooper (1992-93), and Sue Mullett (1979-81). The League, which serves Cohasset residents, thrives today at its headquarters at St. Stephen's.

Auditions for Neil Simon play

Hull Performing Arts is proud to announce auditions for "They're Playing Our Song" book by Neil Simon, music by Marvin Hamlisch and lyrics by Carole Bayer Sager. The show will be directed by David Clinton and the musical director is Derelyn Kahler.

The original cast of "They're Playing Our Song" included Robert Klein and Lucie Arnaz in her Broadway debut. This romantic musical tells the story of Vernon Gersch, a composer, and Sonia Walsh, a lyricist. The two team up to write love songs. In order to learn more about each other, they go to dinner and begin to fall in love. But Sonia has an old relationship to work out...

Vernon's and Sonia's alter egos are acted out by other characters on the stage. Their thoughts and feelings are played out by these characters so that we learn the inner workings of the hearts and minds.

David Clinton will be directing "They're Playing Our Song." Clinton has appeared in many HPA productions including "Two by Two," "A Thurber Carnival," and "I Take This Man." In 1994, he made his directorial debut with "1959 Pink Thunderbird," in which he directed Lone Star. Clinton has also acted as musician, stage manager and set hand. He is the president of Hull Performing Arts and a long-time member of the HPA Board of Directors.

Auditions will be held Monday, Jan. 12, and Wednesday, Jan. 14, 7:30 p.m., at the Anne Scully Senior Center, 197A Samoset Ave. in Hull. Please bring a prepared piece of music (doesn't have to be from the show). Call (617) 925-9086 for directions and other information.

Hull Performing Arts is a non-profit, tax-exempt community theater based in the beautiful seaside Town of Hull.

Skippers look to rebound from early season losses

By Jim O'Sullivan
CORRESPONDENT

After a hand-wringing 72-70 loss to Norton last Monday, the Cohasset Skippers triumphed over the East Bridgewater Vikings by a score of 60-56 last Wednesday. Led by Paul-Michael Quintin with 22 points and Pat Hurley with 17, Cohasset registered a league win in the increasingly tough South Shore League.

Quintin started the game with a pull-up, baseline jumper and point guard. Justin McNamara knocked down a six-footer. Quintin stole the ball and took it to the hoop for two more. Junior Jamie DeMichele netted a jumper and Cohasset took the lead 8-7.

The Skippers traded buckets with the Vikings for the rest of the half, with Hurley and junior Ben Roine both playing very well. But the highlight of the half came when freshman guard Daniel Trowers took the ball to the hole on a break, dribbled behind his back in traffic, and hit the lay-up for two.

Trailing 25-23 at half-time, the Skippers came out strong to start the second half. Andy Hamilton nailed a three-pointer and Hurley and Quintin both began to heat up for the home team. Hurley and Quintin both attacked the offensive boards with ferocity, earning Cohasset some much-needed points.

Although their record is subpar for the moment, there is no cause for panic. The Skippers' flaws are remediable; their free throw shooting has been lackluster, but will undoubtedly improve.

Coach Ron Ford's squad took the lead for good when Trowers performed some more sleight of hand feats, avoiding defenders with a nifty up and under move, scoring two more, and making the score 47-45. Quintin hit a trey to push Cohasset out in front even more, and Hurley iced the game with two straight buckets, bringing the final score to 60-56.

Last Wednesday night, Cohasset played host again to the Carver Crusaders. Ford has called the Crusaders one of the two best teams in the league this year and they played like it, beating the Skippers 72-62, despite the best efforts of a noisy hometown crowd.

The fist half began well for Cohasset, with Hamilton nailing two triples early on and Roine also pulling a three. McNamara stuck two medium range jumpers, but Carver started to pull away. After leading 15-14, the Skippers started to stumble, trailing 37-26 at the half, in spite of threes by Hamilton and Quintin.

After an official's half-time admonition to the crowd, the second half belonged to DeMichele for the Skippers. The junior was all over the place, starting the scoring with a pull-up jumper. McNamara sank a three and DeMichele followed with a pair of free throws. Quintin sandwiched a Hurley freebie with two treys. DeMichele broke out and went coast-to-coast for two, bringing Cohasset within four, at 46-42.

Santa Claus tourney drops the puck on Friday

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

A horde of young hockey players will be celebrating Christmas twice this season. They'll be opening their presents on Dec. 25, of course, but they'll close out 1997 in fine fashion with shiny new trophies.

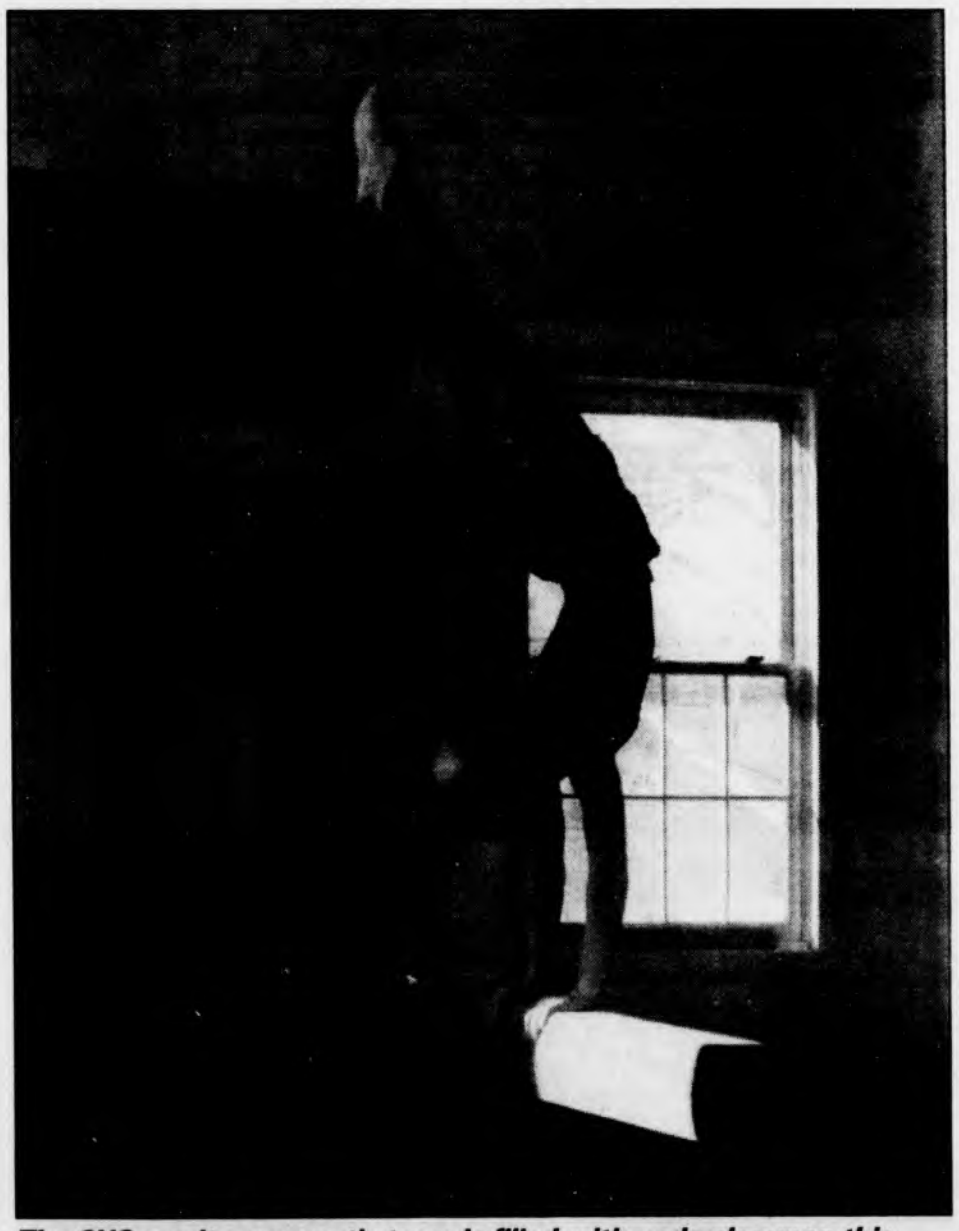
Come Dec. 31, 24 teams of tired, sore Mite and Squirt youth hockey players will unlace their skates for the final time this year. They'll then receive their own individual trophies - each and every one of them.

The 25th annual Santa Claus Tournament, which gets under way on Dec. 26 at Hingham's Pilgrim Arena, will once again make the 7- to 10-year-old players feel as though they are the most important people in the world of hockey.

And who knows. Some of tomorrow's stars may be competing this year. Boston Bruin goaltender Jim Carey and Olympic figure skater Todd Eldredge both were part of the pre-school program when they were first learning to skate and get used to the ice.

However, it's making the children happy that is Hoby Taylor's, the tournament's director, ultimate goal.

"We treat the kids pretty good and have for a lot of years," said Taylor. "The kids skate all day and every team is guaranteed to play in four games. We've been doing it for so long its been going like a well-oiled machine."



The 24 teams which compete are almost solely from the South Shore, giving the tournament a local flavor. There is sometimes a team or two from the Cape that competes and last year a Needham squad entered the hugely popular tournament, but even then the coaches and players didn't have to travel a great distance for the four-day event.

Taylor, especially likes the final day when the kids are awarded their trophies. The tournament format is such that even if a squad loses all four games it finishes in the runner-up position. And Taylor loves watching the looks on the young kids' faces when they are awarded their trophies.

The tournament has a definite holiday feeling surrounding it, thanks to Hingham's Jim Jamieson, who has been playing Santa Claus for events at the rink for more than 10 years. Jamieson said he gets a kick out of the younger kids who look at him with wide-eyed stares when they meet him.

"On the final day the kids file into the function room near Rink C for their awards," said Jamieson. "I hand them a piece of candy and congratulate them

Young CHS gymnasts are ready to tumble

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The only real pressure on the Cohasset High gymnastics team is to, well, avoid putting pressure on themselves. For the first time in four years, the Lady Skippers aren't a clear-cut favorite to capture the South Shore League title.

Instead, head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni wants the girls to concentrate on staying healthy and avoiding injuries.

Ardizzoni likes what she has seen from her young squad so far and is confident the Lady Skippers will be very competitive this season.

"When you have that small amount of kids you can get a lot done in practice," said Ardizzoni, back as head coach after serving as an assistant last season. "This year we're looking to be one of the top-two teams. We see a real good season in front of us, but the threat of injuries is always a concern.

"They would love to be league champions this year. Due to the numbers on any given day, we could have an injury or sickness and that could hurt us."

Caitlin Flint, who sustained a broken toe in a non-gymnastics-related injury, has been working on conditioning and light bar and floor work during practices. Ardizzoni is hoping the talented gymnast will be ready to compete fairly soon.

Co-Captains Carolyn Pratt and Tara Hettstrom are the most experienced members of the squad and will be looked to by Ardizzoni to provide the leadership for the young squad.

She is confident the pair are more than ready to take on the challenge. Hettstrom, an all-star the last three years, is well-respected by her teammates, as is Pratt, the lone senior on the squad.

"Carolyn is a wonderful leader," Ardizzoni said. "The kids really like both her and Tara. If you give them a list of things to do they get them done."

The only downside to Cohasset's season is the drop in numbers from 12 last season to seven this winter. Ardizzoni pointed out, though, that the girls are all business when it comes to practice and entered the season in excellent shape.

"All of these kids are year-round gymnasts," she said. "When the season comes, they're ready to go. We're going to be conservative to start the year. Clean is better and less is better."

Cohasset may not be big in numbers but there's no arguing the talent level is certainly

Basketball program needs your help

The Winter Recreational Basketball Program is in desperate need of a Division Coordinator for the grades 4-6 Basketball program held Saturdays at Cohasset High School.

Roy Davis has directed and coordinated this program during the past 5 years, but no longer has the available time. Roy has indicated that he will work with the new coordinator(s) this year.

Bill Grimm will continue to coordinate the grades 1-3 program at Deer Hill School as he has volunteered to do during the past 4 years.

Interested parents should call Jack Worley at Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, right away.

The Recreation Commission and Basketball Boosters Club are indebted to Roy Davis for the tremendous job he has done during the past 5 years with the Basketball Programs.

Hat trick for CHS wrestlers

Cohasset opened their home schedule in a strong fashion on Dec. 20 defeating Canton 58-18, Dedham 37-27 and King Philip 30-3 in a quad-meet.

Liam O'Donnell had three wins and was the star of the day.

Craig Sherrin had two pins.

Chris Pratt had two wins.

Dan Littauer had a win and a pin.

Mike Baird had 2 pins.

Ben Littauer had 2 wins.

Justin Golden had 2 pins.

Luke Caldwell had 2 pins.

Upcoming meets for the Skippers include the annual Marshfield wrestling tournament that runs from Dec. 29 to Dec. 31.

and Toby gives each one his trophy. Some of the younger kids sometimes try to get on my lap and tell me what they want for Christmas. Occasionally some wise guys will try to pull my beard off, but the kids are all pretty good.

"I try to learn as many of their names as possible so I can congratulate them personally. It's very tiring playing Santa Claus, but it really is a lot of fun and enjoy it. All the people are very nice."

Jamieson is a big fan of Taylor's and admires the work he puts in on the several special events held at the arena during the year. There is a skating outing for special needs children and several other groups as well. And, like the Christmas Tournament, the children never leave without smiles on their faces.

And at Christmas time, that's just the way it ought to be when it comes to children.

there. Carlie Carter will undoubtedly get her fair share of points on the uneven bars and returning all-star Kristin Sheerin will pair up with Hettstrom in the all-around against Duxbury.

Kate Grimm, Amanda Watts, Meredith Bixby and Kathryn Coyne round out the squad.

Ardizzoni considers Scituate to be the preseason favorite to capture the league title, but the Lady Sailors aren't as strong as they were last winter after graduating five seniors.

Hanover, too, looks to be another strong squad, though Ardizzoni admits there are a lot of question marks through the league.

"There are a lot of new faces," she said.

Skippers look to rebound from early season losses

A Hurley foul shot, DeMichele pull-up, and Quintin swish from beyond the arc brought the score to 50-48 with 9:12 remaining, but that would be as close as Cohasset would get. Carver reeled off 10 straight points before Hurley picked up a bucket in the paint.

Hurley would score three more from the line, Quintin would add two, Roine would sink one, and DeMichele would cap his performance with two more three-pointers, but it was all for naught, as the Skippers bowed to Carver, dropping Cohasset's record to 1-2.

Although their record is subpar for the moment, there is no cause for panic. The Skippers' flaws are remediable; their free throw shooting has been lackluster, but will undoubtedly improve.

Also, Cohasset's rebounding has been a concern, and that should be addressed after the holidays when inside presence Alex Russell returns from a knee injury. Playing with a new system like the Skippers have been, can be difficult for the first few games, but Cohasset hopes to reap the benefits of their hard work later in the season.

Hospital donor recognition tree has Cohasset roots

By Margo Sullivan
STAFF WRITER

This time of year, trees often seem to be divided between just two types —the artificial ones that everyone at least pretends they don't like and the much preferred fresh cut balsam, pines and spruces that bear the aroma of Christmas on their branches.

But there's a tree inside the Weymouth South Shore Hospital that undermines those simple distinctions about trees.

It's called the Tree of Life, although it's made out of aluminum, and the contradictions about the tree do not end there. It's strapped in to a wall, but the tree still sparkles and chimes when the wind rustles its metal bark. And though it cost a modest amount to build, it has become a tree that is worth over $11 million. Moreover, it is still growing.

Artists are always trying to touch people, and there are names of 320 people on the leaves of this tree.
– KIRSTEN POUNDER

The tree, according to senior development associate Myrna Walsh, is officially a donor recognition tree which honors people and businesses that have made contributions to the hospital and also memorializes loved ones who have died.

Moreover, Walsh, whose own father's name is embossed on one of the green metal leaves, said the tree has become part of the healing process. Walsh said during the formal ceremony last spring when the tree was officially unveiled, more than 500 people took turns to look inside the tiny hospital foyer where the tree is mounted, and the remarkable thing was the sound of silence as people searched for the name of their family member.

"I had lost sight of what the tree was about," agreed Kirsten Pounder, the Cohasset metals artist who designed the tree of life. Under the pressure of a firm deadline (since the tree had to be ready May 22 for the hospital's 75th anniversary) Pounder said she was hanging the leaves and navigating a scissors lift to reach the higher limbs when an elderly man interrupted her to ask where his wife's name might be.

"He said he felt really honored to have her name on this tree,"

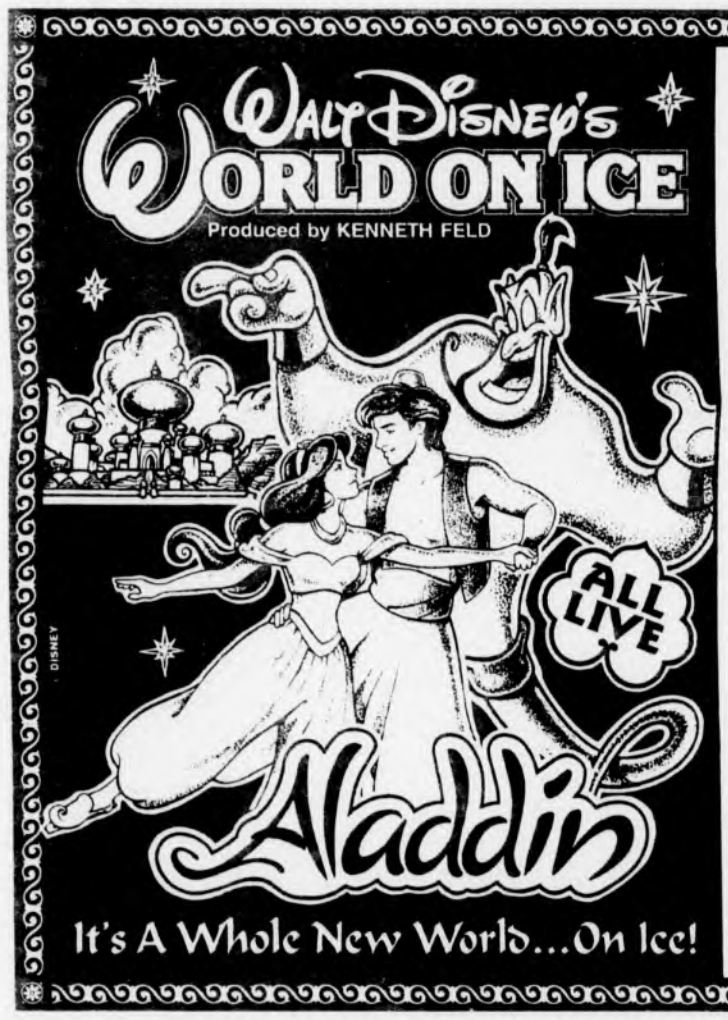
This tree inside South Shore Hospital was designed by Kirsten Pounder, a metals artist from Cohasset.

Pounder recalled. "For me this is one of the best ways to express myself as an artist. Artists are always trying to touch people, and there are names of 320 people on the leaves of this tree."

Pounder, who normally works with small scale sculptures, said the process of building the tree turned out to "be wonderfully smooth when I started to put it together." But she acknowledged she was nervous that it might turn out awful.

The tree was fabricated at the Tallix foundry in New York following Pounder's design. It is 18 feet high and has a nine foot span. To give it depth, Pounder used shape and color, employing a kind of convex ladder for the trunk and bright green color for the leaves.

"It was a little tricky to figure out, but it moves. It's fluid. It needs to look like it's alive."



She also chose a number of different shades of green for the leaves to avoid a flat dull look.

"The darker leaves are to give it a little shadow, but I also used yellow-greens and blue-greens," she said.

The tree is planted in a soft slate base of green and mauve colors that repeat the colors of the tree. Friday, Pounder stooped to dab a shoe scuff off the base.

"It's OK to stand on it," she said agreeably. "Just don't spin around."

What do we have in common at this time of the year?

By Rabbi Stephen A. Karol
CONGREGATION SHA'ARAY SHALOM

What do Jews and Christians on the South Shore have in common at this time of the year? The last phrase of that question brings an easy answer: Chanukah and Christmas. This year, in particular, with Chanukah beginning on the evening of December 23, comparisons can be made very easily. So, most of us are probably thinking about making lists, shopping, parties, food, rituals, decorations and vacation time, not necessarily in that order. Depending on how we handle our activities and expectations for this time of the year, we may feel everything is under control, that we are under a lot of pressure, or that we are somewhere in between those two extremes.

While it is not unusual to compare and contrast Chanukah and Christmas each year, it sometimes draws attention away from the fact that we have much in common throughout the year. That has been very apparent during the past six weeks or so for us at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham, since we have had 10 classes of students visit our temple in that short period of time. Most of them have been CCD classes, and they have come from churches in Hanover, Hingham, Weymouth and Cohasset. Why do they ask to come to the temple for a weekday afternoon introduction to our sanctuary or our Friday evening services? I am told it is because they are being taught the Jewish roots of Christianity, because it is important for them to see Judaism thriving after 4,000 years as exemplified through our synagogue, because it is important for them to respect the differences between Christianity and Judaism and to appreciate what we have in common.

And so, when I show Catholic students that I wear a yarmulke in the sanctuary, they think of the Pope covering his head. When I show any Christian child the Torah scroll, I remind them that "The Five Books of Moses" is part of their heritage as well as mine. When I speak about our ancestors who were freed from slavery in Egypt, I emphasize "our ancestors." As I show them the sacred objects in our sanctuary, the Eternal Light, the Ten Commandments, the Menorah and the Ark which holds the Torah scrolls, I tell them that the "ancestor" of every synagogue and church is the Tabernacle built by our ancestors in the Sinai Desert where all of these objects first appeared. I emphasize to them that we share a rich history of commitment and belief, and I urge them to take their knowledge and share it with others to make the world a better place for all of us. They, of course, have plenty of questions to ask, and there never seems to be enough time to answer them all. That they are interested enough to ask, that they listen to the answers, that they are trying to understand the differences, speaks well for their clergy and lay leaders, for their church, and for themselves.

As we focus on what we are hoping to find this month before our holidays, what our children are dreaming of receiving, how much money we will end up spending, and who will answer our invitations, I hope that we will also focus on what we have in common. Specifically, Judaism and Christianity share an emphasis on providing hope to people, urging them to pursue their dreams, telling them that they have value as human beings, and reminding them that we can give answers to their questions. These are not messages reserved just for the holiday(s) season; they are messages for the whole year and for a whole life. Some of us don't need to be reminded of these messages. For those who do, it is important to hear that what we cherish and what we have in common is available to us every day of the year.

A different service at First Parish

On Sunday, Dec. 28, the 10:30 a.m. morning service at First Parish in Cohasset, Unitarian Universalist, will be held in the Parish House at 23 North Main Street. It will be an interactive service on the theme of winter. Members, friends and visitors are invited to bring along a poem, a story, an anecdote or thought pertinent to the season and appropriate for a worship service. Participants will sit in a circle and share with one another what they have brought. Music by violinist Josef Portaleki, chalice lighting, candle lighting, meditation and perhaps a hymn or two will be included.

There will be no regular church school. Child care for the youngest will be available, and older children are invited to join the circle and participate.

A special feature of the service will be an appreciation of youth director, Kirsten Pounder, who served during the 1996-97 church year and until the end of November. Former youth group members, as well as current members, are warmly invited to join in the thank you.

Christmas worship at St. Stephen's

The Christmas Eve Family Holy Communion service at St. Stephen's is Dec. 24, at 5 p.m. The Jubilee and Saint Gregory children's choirs will sing. The star of Bethlehem will be lit on the church tower.

The Festal Holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m. preceded by a special program of Christmas music to start at 10:30 p.m. The Saint Stephen's adult choir with music director, Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky, will offer music such as "Hallelujah, Amen," by Handel, and "The Snow Lay on the Ground," by Leo Sowerby. The traditional story from the Gospel of Luke is read from the King James Bible. Candlelight illuminates the singing of "Silent Night." The beautiful bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas into the night.

Worship on Christmas Day will be at 10 a.m. Sunday morning worship as usual is at 8 and 10 a.m.

Local piano teacher gets attuned to her second career

Hopes to bring perfect pitch to Cohasset pianos

By Jennifer R. Horan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset piano teacher Sue Thompson has expanded her musical career on a technical note.

A piano teacher for 15 years, Thompson recently received her technical degree in piano tuning from an 18-month program at the Randy Potter School of Piano Technology, the largest piano tuning school in the world.

Now she knows the piano inside and out.

"I thought I'd be really good at it because I play the piano," Thompson recalled. "I also play the guitar and I can tune that. But it really wasn't that easy. It was much more in depth than I ever expected."

One of only three women in her class, Thompson noted that mostly men in their retired years learn the trade of piano tuning as a second career.

"It's not a big calling," she said. "There's probably not a lot of competition."

For Thompson, 37, piano tuning will become her second career.

"I'm really hoping it will take off," she said.

A mother with young children, Thompson wanted to find an occupation that would allow her the flexibility to continue teaching lessons three afternoons a week and still be part of her children's activities.

"It's something else that I can do with music," she said.

Tuning a piano takes Thompson just under two hours. She labors over the strings and hammers that produce a piano's music, cleaning the interior of the instrument, its pedals and 88 keys. Adjusting the piano's tone to a concert pitch A, Thompson also removes dust build-up from the piano's innards. She charges $60 for the service.

"It takes a while. You really only appreciate it when you're done," she said.

Annually cleaning and tuning a piano makes the instrument last much longer and sound better, Thompson said. She hopes to tap into the supply of pianos in homes all over Cohasset, where she has lived for five years. Thompson grew up in Hingham.

"There are a lot of pianos in Cohasset. Every time you walk into someone's house, you see a beautiful piano," she said. "Some people don't even play them. You don't have to, but some day you might want to give your piano to your kids. They will last if they are maintained and will be so much better."

A graduate of Barrington College, Thompson holds a degree in Music Pedagogy, with a guitar major and a piano minor. While she enjoys teaching piano lessons, she has a waiting list of interested students she cannot accommodate because of her children's schedules. She hopes piano tuning will become the focus of her musical career.

Learning the intricacies of tuning pianos has had one negative effect on Thompson's piano playing: now she hears subtleties she never heard before in the instrument while it's being played. Thompson has played the piano since she was nine years old.

"I used to enjoy playing the piano and just listening to the music," she said. "It's very discouraging. Now I hear a little tingle here or a ringing on there. I hear things I wouldn't have normally noticed before."

Sue Thompson of Cohasset recently received her technical degree in piano tuning.

Chiropractic for HEALTH
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg
Chiropractor

THE SPINE AND ALL ITS FACETS

Vertebral facets are the four small joints (two each in two sets) that are positioned in the back of each vertebra. By interlocking with the set on the vertebra above and the set below, the facets form a joint complex that allows spinal mobility. Along with the intervertebral discs, the facets also form the openings in the spine through which nerves exit. These openings, called the intervertebral foramina, have no protective cushioning other than a soft substance known as synovial membrane. Thus, when the facet joints are moved from their normal positions, the result is pain. In addition, reduction in the size of a foramen can lead to nerve impingement. By returning the facet joints to their proper position, the chiropractor helps relieve both problems.

At Scituate Harbor Chiropractic, we believe modern health care is undergoing an incredible revolution today. This is in direct response to understanding the importance of incorporating holistic principles into all health care considerations. For safe and gentle chiropractic care we invite you to call 545-7388 to schedule an appointment. Guard your health as if it were your most precious possession - it is! We're located at 80 Front Street, Scituate Harbor, where we are currently accepting new patients. Let us help you live your life free of pain.

P.S. Spinal adjustment involves moving one or more vertebrae in a specific direction with specific force to a specific depth.

Merry Christmas

St. Anthony's parishioners spread holiday spirit

Jack and Connie Cahill helped collect gifts for needy children.

Parishioners at St. Anthony's collected and wrapped more than 1,000 gifts for children who otherwise might not have a very happy Christmas. Gifts were collected at all the Masses Sunday, Dec. 7, the second Sunday of Advent. A tremendous amount of organization was needed to make sure each child in a family will receive two fun gifts and two serious gifts on Christmas morning.

Donna and Robert Morgan have been responsible for organizing the event for the past five years. Children from the Confirmation classes made the announcements from the altar and distributed the names. Claire Chase, through her work at Catholic Charities Outreach in Brockton, gave the names to the Morgans. Retta Dwyer was the computer expert who made sure that all the labels and all the donors were matched. Betty Cisneros, a sixth-grade teacher at Deer Hill, gathered a group of children to help sort the wrapped gifts as they filled the basement of St. Anthony's rectory. The gifts were grouped in huge plastic bags donated by Curtis Liquors. All in all it was a magnificent effort.

On Dec. 5 and 6, 72 children received the Sacrament of Reconciliation (Confession) for the first time. They are guided by a team of 12 teachers who will continue to teach them until they receive First Communion in May. Two banners at the front of the church are inscribed with their names for all to see.

Jim Lagrotteria, Margy Charles, Father Mulvehill and Jack & Connie Cahill load up the truck with gifts to ensure needy youngsters have a happy Christmas.

Picking up old trees

The Drug and Alcohol Committee is sponsoring a fundraiser to benefit the proposed teen garage. On Saturday, Jan. 3, and Saturday, Jan. 10, a group of adult and teen volunteers will be available to pick up and dispose of your Christmas tree. The fee for this service is $10 per tree, $5 for senior citizens. Just put your tree next to your driveway, place a check payable to the Drug and Alcohol Committee on your door, and they will dispose of your tree.

To order service, call 383-2552, available 24 hours. Please specify which Saturday you prefer. For more information, call Wallace St. John at 383-2627 or Jami Butman at 383-9435.

The Memory Tree at the South Shore Community Center

Each week the Cohasset Mariner will run a list of contributors to the Memory Tree.

This holiday season will be enriched by remembering, in a tangible way, the joy our loved ones have shared with us in seasons past.

Commemorative lights will shine on The Memory Tree on the lawn of the South Shore Community Center. As contributions are received, bulbs will be illuminated throughout the season, and the names of the donors and those remembered will be published in the Cohasset Mariner. Your tax deductible contribution will help continue quality programs at SSCC.

The star atop the 1997 Memory Tree will shine in honor of our departed loved ones whom you wish to honor. Participation options are: Individual: Forget-me-not white lights for a gift of $5; Angel: Individuals, businesses, or professionals giving $15 or more, forget-me-not-white lights; Archangel: Individuals, businesses, professionals giving $50 or more, forget-me-not white lights.

Generosity will be acknowledged by white lights on the Memory Tree, and on the scroll published weekly.

Please make checks payable to South Shore Community Center, P.O. Box 631-3, North Main St., Cohasset 02025.

There are now more than 60 lights shining on our Memory Tree. We have room for lots more. We will be adding lights to the tree each week through the month of December.
